Celebrating retirement

Tapping the resources of older persons

By Tilman Smith

"Wisdom is with the aged and understanding in length of days" (Job 12:12).

In this fast-paced "Information Age," wisdom is a word we seldom use. Ours is an age when numbers are "crunched" and facts become "data," to be digitized, processed and "massaged." The adjective "wise" is attached routinely only to the words "owl" and "guy." What does wisdom mean in our world?

As the Old Testament philosopher spoke of it in this verse, wisdom is not synonymous with having a high IQ, unusual mental powers or an impudent mouth. Like a towering tree, the wisdom of "the aged" has grown slowly but ever outward through long years, fed by a constant infusion of knowledge and shaped by experience.

What distinguishes the wisdom of older persons from mere knowledge?

- Perspective: They have experienced a full life, not just a few thin slices.
- Objectivity: They have no hidden agenda to serve as fronts for seeking job promotions, higher wages or social rank, or for thwarting competition.
- Experience: The elders can sort out those things that have failed and those that have proved to be worthwhile and discard the excess.
- Tolerance and flexibility: No group in recorded history has had to adjust to so many changes within a lifetime. Adapting to change creates tolerance for other viewpoints and methods.
- To live better with less: The Great Depression of 1930-40 tried the spirit and brought out the best and the worst. Those who could not adapt to severe conditions were wiped out, and even those who did survive economically and socially have been forever imprinted and influenced by the experience.
- Witness: They have seen God's providence tested and proven.
- Forgiveness: They have learned to forgive and to be forgiven.
- To face death: They are closer to death and can accept this reality of life.

Older persons present their bodies and minds as ones whose growth has never stopped. They are renewed, refurbished and wear-resistant, but neither obsolescent models nor retreads.

Yet, despite the enormous problems our society faces today — hunger, displacement, suffering, spiritual ignorance, general ignorance and widening distance between the haves and have-nots — it consistently underutilizes the resources of older persons.

One reason is that older persons are victims of stereotypes based on a small sample — those who are physically decrepit and mentally disoriented. Such persons represent less than five percent of those over 65.

Eradicating stereotypes about aging would increase appreciation for a pluralistic society. Younger and older persons would see that each group is indispensable, and that neither is disposable.

Still, older persons should not place all the blame for stereotyping or ageism upon society. They must do their part to demonstrate to society that they are real persons with real names, resources, needs, worth and beauty.

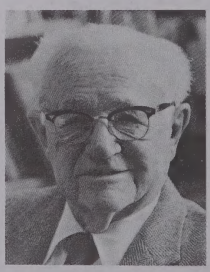
Unfortunately many older adults do not have confidence in the currency of their gifts, nor do they realize their scope. They also question the receptivity of younger persons — the current power structures — to their services. Many fear misunderstanding, rejection and ridicule.

How can we tap the resources of older adults? First, we must begin by recognizing that older persons need the discernment, affirmation, understanding and invitation of younger persons to share their gifts.

Second, we need a new concept of retirement. I do not like to use the word "retirement," but rather to speak of new careers in which older persons choose their hours, the kinds of experiences they want and reserve the right to say no. If people persist in "retiring," I would suggest that the proper length of time is about two weeks. The motto might be: "Hats off to the past; coats off to the future!"

Third, we must recognize the value of each age group. No generation is complete in itself. We need each other for wholeness. In the forest ecosytem, each plant and animal is essential; the loss of one species sets off a cycle of upheaval and disruption. The human family is also an ecosystem; at every age human beings play unique and essential roles.

That vision of community is illustrated beautifully by the Old Testament prophet Zechariah: "Thus says the Lord: I will return to Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem, and Jerusalem shall be called the faithful city, and the mountain of the Lord of hosts, the Holy Mountain. Thus says the Lord of Hosts: Old men and old women shall again sit in the streets of Jerusalem, each with staff (support) in hand for every age (need). And the streets shall be full of boys and girls playing in its streets. Thus says the Lord of hosts: If it is marvelous in the sight of the remnant of this people in these days, should it also be marvelous in my sight, says the Lord of Hosts?" (Zech. 8:3-6, RSV)



Tilman R. Smith has been gerontologist for the Mennonite Church since 1971. He was a teacher and administrator in Illinois public schools for 29 years, president of Hesston College from 1959 to 1986, director of an institutional self-study at Eastern Mennonite College in 1968-69 and visiting professor of education at GC 1969-71.

Celebrating retirement

By Helen Alderfer

In retrospect I don't recall thinking about retirement very much. Certainly in my 40th year, the day Alta Mae Erb handed Christian Living editorial responsibilities to me upon her retirement, my own retirement seemed far off in some never-never land. Yet, I don't think I deliberately refused to face approaching retirement. It was more that life did not grant me an abundance of time to think about subjects that weren't immediately pressing — like keeping a house running, helping educate five children, serving as a pastor's wife, doing nolunteer work and gardening — enough activities for any juggler.

I did have a kind of vision of my retirement day, sparked by a minor car accident that occurred when I was a teenager. Riding in a Model-A Ford with several other persons, we were hit by another car at an intersection surrounded on all four sides by Illinois-August corn fields. I was surprised at the rattling, clashing, grinding sound the impact of the cars made, followed by a moment of total silence (as though nothing had happened) before we all jumped from the cars to assess the damage.

I imagined retirement day might be like that, but when it came it was not like that at all. In the weeks before my last day in the office, there were the usual farewell events — an editorial party and recognition in chapel, at which time I received a new Bible, a very fine one. I gave a chapel talk that I titled, "Some random thoughts before retirement" in which I said rash things like, "I will not be caught saying 'I'm really busier now than ever,' and more plausible things like a quote from my files: 'Every retired editor has an excellent novel in her, which is a good place for it.' "

The last day at work was like the years-of-work days before it — usually 7:30-4:00 — but on this one I stayed later, not in a final noble gesture of faithfulness but simply because there was a last task to finish before leaving the office forever.

The next weeks were busy with moving to Goshen, renovating a 107-year-old house, beginning some landscaping and getting ready for Christmas. I was staining woodwork yet at midnight before our children from Denver arrived a few hours later.

After Christmas and three open houses — one for everyone who had worked on the house, one for the neighbors and one for relatives — I kept waiting for something to strike, depression perhaps. People were asking the usual questions: "How is retirement? Really, how did you choose Goshen (from the ones with Florida on their minds)? Do you miss Scottdale, the Publishing House, the hills of Western Pennsylvania?"

"I love retirement, every day of it," I told a friend. She said, "I hope you are celebrating it." Of course, that's what retirement calls for, despite there being losses as well as gains.

But that is nothing new; losses and gains had happened at every stage of my life and with every move. My retirement desk at home does not come with the benefit of a secretary (that almost immobilized me at first), of coffee breaks with the good conversation of fellow workers, of the day-to-day working with others in a common task. And yes, the hills!

I haven't sent up celebrative rockets or a hundred helium balloons, but I give thanks every day for living across the street and up the block from our oldest daughter, Ann, and her family, at their invitation (I never dreamed I would be able to see grandchildren every day); for finding a church, College Mennonite, that would meet my corporate worship needs so well and give me a place to serve; for having my sister and other relatives and friends in the area, including my good friend Lois from Goshen College days who moved from Illinois to a house three blocks away; for a comfortable house and an acre of land to work and enjoy; for enough chances to teach, speak, write and edit; for time to read, take walks or bike, enjoy the flowers. Retirement has not shut a door but flung it wide open!

I never cease to be astounded that I, a night person, can stay up as long as I want without having to think that the next day will start before I am ready for it. I was also amazed when working toward the deadline of this article (yes, there are still deadlines in retirement) to hear myself beginning to say to my husband Ed, "I'm really busier . . ." I'm not sure what I expected from him, surprise or commiseration? But knowing I wasn't really complaining, he only said, "Just enjoy it!"

What are my continuing hopes? At times when teaching or editing I worried that I was developing a pattern of being too critical. But then I reminded myself that I was also a cheerleader, cheering a roomful of eyes to light up, encouraging writers to see their work through to print. So I have decided that I want to continue to be a critic and a cheerleader.

I want to have the heart that sings, "No gifts have we to offer for all Thy love imparts, but that which Thou deservest, our humble, thankful hearts."

I hope to never forget that to rejoice in the good life, with only casual thought for those who have too little, is to be either insensitive or fanciful.

I say with Dag Hammerskjold, "For what has been — thanks! For all that shall be — yes!"

Helen Alderfer '43 was a writer and editor for 26 years at the Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pa., before moving to Goshen with her husband, Ed, in 1984.

Planning for retirement

By Dianne Springer Brenneman

Retirement. What will it be like? There are at least as many experiences with retirement as there are people who retire. Consider two hypothetical cases.

Example 1

Mr. and Mrs. K have thoroughly enjoyed the three years since Mr. K retired. Their alarm clock is set for 7 a.m. each morning except for Saturday and Sunday. On those days they "sleep in" until 7:30 a.m.

Mr. and Mrs. K are "on the go" from the moment their feet hit the floor in the morning until they finish their evening meal about 6:30 p.m. During the day they visit with friends, babysit with grandchildren, garden, walk their two-mile exercise path, volunteer at the local hospital and Meals-on-Wheels program or work as elders for their church.

Following dinner, Mr. K sits in his easy chair, feet propped up, reading the paper or a historical novel. Mrs. K often relaxes by listening to classical or religious music.

Mr. and Mrs. K love visiting their three children and seven grandchildren, their siblings and "dear old friends." Recently they set aside one Sunday each month to invite two young families and three single adults to their home for dinner and games.

Life feels very special and satisfying to the Ks.

Example 2

There is tension in the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. When Mr. G retired, he lost most of the people he had associated with for years. Oh, he tries to find reasons to go back to the office, but the longer he is away, the more out of place he feels when he goes back. The guys from work seldom call or visit him; they are too busy, just as he was too busy to call guys who had retired before he did.

Mr. G is bored much of the time and feels worthless. He finds no reason to get out of bed in the morning so often sleeps in until 9:30 or 10:00. He feels that Mrs. G is always nagging him about what he could do if he weren't so lazy. She reminds him of her interest over the years in inviting people to their home and developing friendships with couples their age.

She further reminds him that if he wouldn't have been too busy to do that earlier, he might not be so miserable now. She would like to become acquainted with other couples — now that Mr. G has the time. But Mr. G wants only to talk "to the guys"; he's not interested in any social stuff. Mr. G finds little energy to do anything about his misery except complain.

I have had the opportunity to see both the "best" and

GC trivia update

Several people wrote to offer corrections to the GC trivia information in our last Bulletin. Paul Mininger corrected the date of the faculty photograph on the cover from 1934-35 to 1933-34. Mrs. John Fleming pointed out that although most students did not wear academic robes in the 1972 commencement, a few, including her son Ian, did.

Roy Umble offered a further correction to that question. He says that students did not wear robes at commencement up through at least 1935. He had other clarifications, too. Although Ernest Miller was the first GC president to have a doctorate when he was inaugurated, S. C. Yoder received his S.T.D. in 1939 while he was president.

On the question of which presidents were ordained, Umble said that "my impression is that Noah Byers left GC for Bluffton in 1913 [because], among other reasons . . . , he felt that the college should have a minister as president and the board made no move to ordain him." Umble further pointed out that acting president Carl Kreider was not ordained.

Also, Jeff Keim should be Jeff Kime.

Staff changes

With this issue of the Bulletin we bid farewell to two talented members of our staff — graphic artist, Suelyn Lee, and director of alumni relations, Laurie Neumann Nafziger. Suelyn has been with information services since 1984 creatively handling the hundreds of printing projects that pass through our office, including 18 issues of the alumni Bulletin.

As alumni director since 1985, Laurie has been responsible for the alumni section of the Bulletin, which she reminds us every issue, is the most widely-read section.

We wish them equal success in the next chapter of their lives.

"worst" of retirement in my practice as a gerontological social worker. Retirement does not mean the same thing to everyone; everyone "reacts" to retirement, but not everyone goes through a "retirement crisis."

My observations and studies lead me to believe that a smooth retirement is associated with personal adaptability, positive social circumstances, good health and financial security. These things call for preparation. Certainly not all the circumstances one faces as a retired person can be prepared for, but I am convinced a great deal of preparation can take place, even with the many uncertainties one will face in his or her retirement years.

As I think of preparing for my retirement, it occurs to me that I've already begun. Until now most, if not all of my preparations have been unconscious. I've not chosen any particular course of action because of thinking about retirement. Nevertheless, I've been preparing for retirement even from my earliest years as I've developed certain patterns of behavior, personality traits and interests, and as I've chosen specific educational pursuits. Who I am and how I respond to the "challenges" of life will continue with me into retirement.

I now view developing a satisfying and responsible lifestyle that will continue into my retirement years as the best possible method of retirement "preparation" for myself. The "challenges of life" and my accompanying responses and preparations will change throughout the stages of my life, but my goals to live responsibly and happily will hopefully remain.

The following are some things I'm attempting to do to facilitate personal adaptability, positive social circumstances, good physical and mental health and financial security.

Physical health

1. Have regular physical exams.
2. Have regular optical, hearing and dental exams.
3. Develop better nutritional habits.
4. Exercise regularly.
5. Be alert for warning symptoms of diseases and act on them.

Mental health

1. Develop a good self-concept. For me, this means learning to feel good about who I am; to be able to say I'm OK because of who I am, not because of what I do.
2. Learn positive ways to deal with stress. Stress accompanies all developmental stages; we don't outgrow it! It seems to me, then, that developing positive means of responding to stress will be helpful throughout life, including as one deals with the unknowns of the retirement years. That process includes learning to deal with one thing at a time, recognizing that I can choose how to respond to stressful circumstances and seeking out "people resources" to help me look at various options as I decide how I want to respond to a stressful situation.
3. Plan specific periods of relaxation in each day to "slow down" my mind and body.
4. Learn to be flexible and adaptable. Be open to hearing new ideas. Learn flexibility in responding to unexpected occurrences. Remain adaptable to changes.
5. Continue to develop meaningful friendships with others of all generations. Remain interested in and concerned for others. Express that concern. Keep in close contact with family members. Facilitate ways to meet and learn to know neighbors.
6. Assume responsibility for things I can control rather than blame things on others.
7. Develop strong and varied interests. Develop a curiosity for continual exploration and learn new things. Enroll in continuing ed courses and workshops.
8. Plan regular times of leisure and recreation.
9. Continue active church involvement.
10. Continue volunteer activities.

Finances

1. Attempt to live a simplified lifestyle.
2. Learn to budget and try to live within that budget.
3. Learn to shop for "bargains"; buy for use, not looks.
4. Plant a garden to cut food costs.
5. Explore in-depth the insurance and pension plans offered by my employing agency.
6. Talk with a resource person about good and responsible types of investments for any extra money I may have during my working years.
7. Keep an up-dated will.
8. Approximately two to three years prior to retirement, attempt to compute my approximate retirement pension. Try to live on that amount of money for a minimum of several months to see what actual adjustments I would need to make during retirement.
9. Be open to adapt my housing situation to meet my financial and health needs.

These are things I will be continually working with. Retirement for me, then, becomes a continuation of my life rather than a stopping point or a new beginning. I want my lifestyle to be one that will help me adjust to any changes and limitations that may come.

Goshen College's second oldest alumna recently celebrated her 102nd birthday Nov. 28.

Barbara Leaman Moore '02, of Lititz, Pa., entered Elkhart Institute to study business and "normal" courses when she was 16. During her stay she boarded at the home of N. E. Byers. Lina Zook was dean of women.

After graduating she worked with several employers as a stenographer until she married. During her long and eventful life she raised five children and has lost count of the great-grandchildren. She has been active in church and community affairs, including helping to found the noted Farm Women Societies of Lancaster County, which now number some three dozen or more.

She currently lives in an apartment at the home of a grandson, the same house in which she was born 102 years ago, and drove her own car until this past June when she decided that she had been driving long enough (72 years). She still works one day a week at a doctor's office in Lititz, filling and labeling prescriptions and sterilizing instruments. She has an active social calendar and is a spirited conversationalist.

Of her experience at the Elkhart Institute she says, "I was pleased that my father sent me out there because it gave me a broader view of life and I gained many lifelong friends."

Nursing alumni network helps recruit students

Who knows Goshen's nursing department? Its alumni, of course.

Believing that, the nursing and admissions departments pooled their efforts last March to form a Nursing Alumni Network. Nursing alumni were asked to volunteer time to help with student recruitment and provide counsel to the department. Volunteers are encouraged to "talk up" Goshen, refer potential student names to the admissions department and bring prospective students to campus.

The response has been gratifying. Director of nursing Fran Wenger reports that 25 alumni from New York to Florida to California have agreed to participate. She'd welcome hearing from any other alumni interested in volunteering.

"Culture for Service" in the Nigerian bush

By Alice M. Roth

Correctly pronounced, the address on Susan Whitacre Bergman's '84 Bulletin is musical: Obot Idim, Ibesekpo, Cross River State, Nigeria. Via radio communication, Susan is outstation staff nurse for Immanuel Lutheran Hospital, four-hours drive away. "I have learned to adapt somewhat to 'bush' medicine," she said, "but the first time the Dutch doctor performed surgery on my front veranda, I was a nervous wreck."

Although Susan cannot be licensed to practice nursing in Nigeria (the country ostensibly has enough nurses), she reports that the many health needs tax fully the nursing skills she learned at GC.

Susan is also coordinator of Health Concerns for their Board of Missions. In that job she is responsible for the health matters of missionaries in Nigeria.

Her third area of work is teaching health and wellness to seminarians in local congregations. Susan enjoys this most — working with women's groups and encouraging congregational health committees. She has developed her own syllabus and materials, appropriate to the culture of her community.

Her two years in Nigeria have made her increasingly appreciative of her GC experience. "So many of the faculty have been overseas, and they helped us reach our potential," she said. "And here, I have to work from basic theory; situations are bizarre and unexpected."

Last year Susan wrote to the nursing division faculty, "I can never repay the Mennonite Church and its people for this great gift . . . of the fine education I received. It has proven essential in adapting to Nigerian life."

GC Executive Vice President Alice Roth wrote this report after visiting the Bergman family last summer in Nigeria on a Mennonite Board of Missions assignment.

Consolidation plan announced

The Goshen College Board of Overseers approved a consolidation plan of academic program and administrative economies on Nov. 17 for the 1987-88 school year that amount to $277,500. This represents 2.8 percent of the school's current $9.9 million budget.

The faculty, which has 78 teaching faculty members and 42 administrative faculty members, will be cut by 5.8 percent. Seven full-time faculty positions will be cut; of those, four will be vacated by early retirement. The faculty members retiring early will be Al Albrecht, professor of communication; Mary E. Bender, professor of French; Mary K. Nafziger, professor of education, and J. Harold Yoder, professor of physical education.

The three persons not retiring whose jobs will be eliminated have reached agreement with the college on severance packages. They are Cheryl M. Martin, assistant professor of nursing; Catherine R. Mumaw, professor of home economics, and Marion R. Wenger, assistant librarian, Mennonite Historical Library, and professor of German.

In the curriculum, four majors and a concentration area will be dropped. Majors in home economics, home-economics education, French and physical education (52 hours) and the speech concentration in the communication major will be eliminated.

The major in physical education being eliminated is one designed for persons seeking certification to teach physical education for grades one through 12. The regular major and minor in physical education will be maintained.

There are currently 10 home-economics and home-economics-education majors, 12 French majors, and no students in either the special physical education major or the speech concentration, out of an enrollment of 948 full-time students.The college will enable junior and senior majors in those fields to complete their degrees as planned, Willard Martin, academic dean, said.

The rest of the budget reductions will be accomplished through measures such as offering certain courses less often, charging fees for private music lessons, raising fees for studio art courses, closing Good Library between trimesters, reducing the number of pages in the Bulletin and eliminating the physician's assistant position in the Health Center.

Rising costs per student and demographic trends made it necessary to plan for a smaller college of continued high quality, Victor Stoltzfus, Goshen College president, said. Although enrollment increased to 948 full-time students in fall 1986, that increase did not make up for the decline of the previous five years. Enrollment decreased from 1,155 full-time students in 1980-81 to 863 in 1985-86.

Board acts on tuition

Tuition for the 1987-88 school year will increase by 3.6 percent as a result of action by the Goshen College Board of Overseers, who met Dec. 15-16 on campus.

However, students can avoid the increase and freeze tuition at this year's rate by making a $200 deposit by May 1. Tuition will be $5,720 without the early-deposit discount and $5,520 with the discount. Total costs for a student in 1987-88, including tuition, room and board, will be $8,250, a 4.4 percent increase.

Also approved was a continuation of the program to match student aid from congregations or conferences with up to $500 in Goshen College grants or scholarships.

"Our goal is to keep increases in line with the projected Consumer Price Index and thus keep Goshen College affordable," said Jim Wideman, chair of the finance committee.

In other action, the board moved to provide phones in all student rooms, enabling students to place and receive local and long-distance phone calls without going through the campus switchboard. If local telephone equipment is updated, as now planned, the phones will be in operation by September 1987. The adjusted roomrate will include this new service.

Also at the two-day meeting the board granted full-year sabbatical leaves to Robert Birkey, associate professor of social work; Marvin Blickenstaff, professor of music; Merritt Gardner, professor of mathematics; Mervin Helmuth, associate professor of nursing; Robert Yoder, associate professor of Spanish, and John Yordy, professor of chemistry.

Faculty members granted six-month sabbaticals were Marvin Bartel, professor of art; Ruth Gunden, professor of physical education and international student adviser, and Norman Kauffmann, dean of student development. The board granted a year's leave of absence to Virginia Christophel, associate professor of nursing.

The board extended its exception to the no-dance policy until its June meeting. As an experiment, approved by the board in its October meeting, three dances were held on campus in the fall. Because of problems caused by off-campus dances, the administration believed that having dances on campus would provide a more wholesome, alcohol-free atmosphere for student interaction. The three dances turned out well, according to Norm Kauffmann, dean of student development.

Before making a final decision on the policy, board members said they want the administration to develop guidelines for a dance policy and also want to allow more time for responses to the issue from the church. In a letter to pastors and parents, President Victor Stoltzfus had solicited guidance on the dancing issue. A majority of the 100 persons who responded to his letter supported the board's decision to permit supervised dancing on campus, he reported.

Basketball season begins

GC's basketball teams seem to have swapped fortunes for the 1986-87 season. The women's team had a 16-8 record in the 1985-86 season and tied for first in the Hoosier Conference for Women. However, by Christmas break in the 1986-87 season, Coach Pert Shetler and her squad had a record of 2-5. Dawn Gerber, a junior center from Brutus, Mich., did tie the women's single-game scoring record Dec. 12 by scoring 31 points against Taylor University.

On the other hand, the men's team under Coach Ed Gore suffered through a 4-19 season in 1985-86. Through Dec. 18 this year, the Maple Leafs had accumulated a 5-6 record, including a 90-75 win over Eastern Mennonite College Nov. 29 in the Mennonite Classic.

The busiest sports season of the year, fall, ended with several GC athletes winning accolades.

With women's cross-country in its first official year, sophomore Aletha Stahl, Harrisonburg, Va., was the first GC woman to run in the national NAIA cross-country meet. She placed 155th in a field of 320 runners Nov. 15 in Kenosha, Wis., setting a personal record. Stahl and junior Beth Hochstetler, New Carlisle, Ind., were named to the Hoosier Conference for Women all-conference and the NAIA District 21 all-district teams.

Senior Fred Kem, Knox, Ind., was named to the NAIA all-district men's cross-country team for the second consecutive year. The cross-country team finished second in the Mid-Central College (MCC) Conference meet.

Five soccer players were named to the MCC all-conference team. They are senior Jeff Aeschliman, Salem, Ore.; junior Darin Derstine, Elkhart, Ind.; senior Tony Figueroa, San Pedro Sula, Honduras; junior Kenton Longenecker, New Holland, Pa., and senior Marc Zook, Goshen. Aeschliman, Derstine and Zook also were named to the NAIA District 21 all-district team. The soccer team ended the season with a record of 6-6-4.

The volleyball team ended its season with a 10-16 record. Junior Karen Yoder, Elkhart, Ind., was named to the Hoosier Conference for Women's all-conference first team. Senior Amy Schloneger, Orrville, Ohio, and junior Dawn Gerber, Brutus, Mich., were named to the second all-conference team.

The field hockey team finished the year with a record of 8-7. Juniors Biz Weaver, Blue Ball, Pa., and Chris Landis, Lancaster, Pa., were selected for the NAIA District 21 all-district team.

News briefs

Innovation and growth

The American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education (AACTE) has awarded a $1,000 grant to the Goshen College education department to develop a more systematic approach for dealing with special children in regular classroom settings. The GC program will include a series of monthly consultations with area teachers and a teacher-education faculty trip in the spring to Columbia, Mo., to observe classes. . . . The final block of land to complete the Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center, Wolf Lake, Ind., was transferred to Goshen College Dec. 12 by the Indiana chapter of The Nature Conservancy. Merry Lea is now 1,100 acres.

Students

Students registered the highest rate of satisfaction with their college experience in five years by returning to campus for further study at an 88.4 percent rate for the 1986-87 school year — 9.1 percentage points more than 1985-86's 79.3 percent. The highest rate since 1981 has been 82.4, in 1983. . . . Nearly twice as many students this fall as last received financial aid from their congregations to attend Goshen, student finance director Walter Schmucker has announced. And the total dollar amount given for student aid from congregations increased proportionately. Congregations gave $361,519 for their students. . . . Forty-two Goshen students joined the nearly 40,000 demonstrators at the culmination of "The Great Peace March" Nov. 15 in Washington, D.C. The students, organized by the Peace Society, helped walk the last distance from Meridian Hill to the Lincoln Memorial — a fraction of the March's cross-country distance. . . . Steve Keiser, a French major from Cedar Falls, Iowa, has won a prestigious Rotary Foundation Scholarship for graduate study in Strasbourg, France, next year. Keiser will concentrate on French along with other interdisciplinary studies. A National Merit scholar, Keiser has exhibited leadership skills in many areas of campus life, including his work as a resident assistant and as a student assistant in campus ministries.

Well spoken

The next Yoder Public Affairs Lecturer is Rep. Patricia Schroeder (D-Colo.) Jan. 20-21. . . . Colleen McElroy, director of the creative writing program at the University of Washington, Seattle, will be the 1987 S.A. Yoder Memorial Lecturer Feb. 10-11. A Black poet and playwright, she recently finished a play on the life of Harriet Tubman. During her stay, the English department will conduct a High School Writers' Workshop. . . . The Staley Distinguished Christian Scholar lectures March 11-13 will bring Alan and Eleanor Kreider to campus. Kreiders have been teaching and providing leadership for the London, England, Mennonite Fellowship under the Mennonite Board of Missions.

Hunsberger to direct Haiti project

Arlin Hunsberger, Goshen College director of international education, has been named director of the Haiti Agro-Forestry Outreach Program. Starting Jan. 1, 1987, he will take a two-year leave of absence to direct the program, which is sponsored by the Organization of American States and the Pan American Development Foundation. Hunsberger currently is on sabbatical leave from his Goshen College position.

The Haiti Agro-Forestry Outreach Program began in 1981 and was funded by the United States Agency for International Development, Canada, Belgium and private corporations, Phoebe Lansdale, program director for the Pan American Development Foundation, said.

Hunsberger will direct 40 Haitian and non-Haitian agro-foresters who work in five regional teams to promote tree-planting on small Haitian farms. The "tree-cropping" helps stop erosion of Haitian mountainsides and should provide the farmers with trees to harvest for fodder, charcoal and poles within three to five years, Lansdale said.

The program is carried out through 43 tree nurseries and more than 100 missionaries and local development workers. Only fast-growing tropical hardwoods are used to provide quick results for farmers. Trees are planted in rows wide enough that food crops can be planted between the trees, the PADF program director added.

Hunsberger, 51, is a 1962 graduate of Eastern College, St. Davids, Pa., and has done graduate work at Temple University, the University of Notre Dame and the University of Haiti. He has been director of international education since 1968 and previously worked in development projects in Haiti for the Mennonite Central Committee and Church World Service. Hunsberger is a member of the Council on International Educational Exchange and the Indiana Consortium of International Programs.

Art study-tour to Florence

The Florentine Renaissance will be emphasized in the GC art study tour of Florence, Italy, June 12-July 3, 1987. Abner Hershberger, professor of art, will lead the tour, which may be taken for four credit hours. In Florence, the group will visit the Uffizi Galeria, Pitti Palazzo, Il Duomo, the Palazzo del Bargello, the Medici Chapel. It also will take one-day trips to the cities of Siena and Pisa.

The course will include lectures, group discussions and assigned readings. Students will keep journals and document their observations in a studio medium such as drawing, watercolor or photography. No previous experience is necessary; individual studio instruction is given. The group will stay in a 14th-Century villa. Interested persons should contact Hershberger at the Goshen College art department.

Shenk to lead eighth Middle East Bible seminar

Stanley C. Shenk, professor emeritus of Bible, will lead the eighth Goshen College Middle East Bible seminar May 29 through June 12, 1987.

The seminar, which may either be audited or taken for credit, will include tours of sites in Jordan and Israel. In Jordan, the group will be based in Amman and will visit Petra, Mt. Nebo, Madeba and Jerash.

In Israel, the group will visit Jerusalem, Engedi, Masada, Beth-Shean, the Valley of Jezreel, the Sea of Galilee, Tiberias, Capernaum, the Mount of the Beatitudes, Hazor, Dan, Nazareth, Megiddo and Caesarea.

Because of recent events, several security precautions will be taken, Shenk said. The group will fly on a non-American airline, will avoid potential trouble spots identified by the U.S. consulate in Jerusalem and will not go to Egypt.

Assisting him in the Middle East Bible Seminar will be his wife Doris Sell Shenk, who has traveled in the area eight times.

Still setting trends at age 90

Guy and Clara Hooley Hershberger are well known as Mennonite leaders, he as an historian and she as a Sunday-school teacher and Women's Missionary and Service Commission leader. However, even they probably didn't think that when they both were 90 years old, as they are now, they would still be trend-setters.

The Hershbergers and 2.6 million others in the United States are members of the fastest-growing segment of the U.S. population, people over the age of 85. Demographers predict that there will be 5 million people over 85 in the U.S. by the year 2000 and 13 million by the year 2040. Those who study aging call persons over 85 the "oldest old."

Guy's 90th birthday was Dec. 3 and Clara's July 22. GC celebrated Guy's with a special convocation Dec. 3, "Toward the Year 2000: War, Peace and Nonresistance." Don Blosser, GC associate professor of Bible; Edgar Metzler, associate secretary for congregational peace and social concerns for the Mennonite Board of Congregational Ministries, and John Richard Burkholder, GC adjunct professor of religion, spoke about the influence of Guy's seminal book. The audience also added non-scholarly notes by singing "Happy Birthday."

For Guy Hershberger, living to be 90 years old was no surprise. His father lived to be 90 and his mother 93, and three of his aunts lived to be 96, 98 and 104 years old, respectively. He worked until he was 70, when he retired as a Goshen College professor of history.

Like many older retirees, Guy and Clara have had a two-stage retirement. When Guy retired, they moved to Arizona, spending about nine months a year in Glendale and returning to Goshen in late spring. They made the trips between Arizona and Indiana by car themselves every year, until "it began to be more of a chore," Guy said. "Our children thought we should come here (to Greencroft)."

The secret to a satisfactory retirement, Guy believes, is developing a set of activities one enjoys before actually retiring. When he retired, "I was planning to go on with the things I had been doing," he said. "I continued to write and to attend scholarly meetings."

Clara taught school for a few years before their marriage. Besides raising her family, she participated in church activities that were an extension of her interest in teaching, serving 40 years as superintendent of the College Mennonite Church children's department and working actively in the WMSC.

She's continued working in WMSC and is the "deaconess" of the Hershbergers' Sunday-school class, the Beacon class, visiting members who are ill or housebound.

In "old old" age, pacing oneself wisely is the key, Guy noted. "By the time I was 80, I began to realize that I wouldn't get all the things done I had my fingers in," he said. "I was too ambitious." Guy scaled down the research he had planned.

Women need to be able to reduce their activities so they can concentrate on their interests, too, he said. Living at Greencroft in Goshen has freed Clara from many household duties, so that she can devote more time to quilting, a favorite activity.

Guy is working on a new book, tentatively titled "Called to Maturity," about the Mennonite Church. Leonard Gross, Mennonite Church archivist, had suggested to Guy that he write an interpretive work about the church's history in the 20th Century.

Guy also attended the centennial celebration of the East Union congregation near Kalona, Iowa, of which his mother was a charter member. The celebration, along with Gross' suggestion, "set me off on something," he said.

"It will take me a couple of years to do it," Guy said. "If I live to be 95, I think I can get it done."

Besides church and scholarly work, Guy and Clara also make a point of keeping physically active by walking six days a week.

Living to be 90 — or even 80 — years old doesn't appeal to some people, who fear chronic illness and think that older people surely are haunted constantly by the specter of death. However, author Malcolm Cowley wrote in his book, The View From 80, "I think less about death than might be expected. As death comes nearer, it becomes less frightening, less a disaster, more an everyday fact to be noted and filed away."

Guy concurs with that view. He and Clara often visit sick friends who are quite ill in the Greencroft Nursing Center. "I wouldn't want to be in that same situation, but it could still happen," he said. "I'm not worried about it.

"We've never had fears (of death) or anything of that sort," Guy added. "I don't know what there is to be afraid of — we all have to die sometime."

Of course, their Christian faith has played a key role in forming this attitude. "Clara and I have felt that we had a mission, a calling," Guy said. "Our responsibility was to be wrapped up in this calling."

Building on the past

By Victor Stoltzfus

Colleges exist because some ideas and values are so important that one generation dedicates their lives to pass them on to the next. Intergenerational truth is the heart of education. The Carnegie Foundation's recent report, College: The Undergraduate Experience in America, is "heart medicine." Goshen College was among the 200 colleges and universities invited to Harvard University for the first public discussion of the Carnegie Report.

Before the Carnegie Report, however, Goshen College was at work on a careful review of our own "undergraduate experience." Since spring, 1986, we have been engaged in a review of all administrative units and academic programs. A faculty steering committee was charged with the task of recommending $250,000-$450,000 in budget reductions. We did this in response to three policy goals mandated by the Goshen College Board of Overseers:

1. To reduce program costs to a level of annual operations that can be supported by tuition and regular contributed support (in recent years, special gifts were required to balance the operating budget);
2. To manage costs and prices so that the college is affordable to more students;
3. To bring salaries and wages up to the average level of church-related colleges in Indiana.

We are working toward these goals in an increasingly competitive world. By 1997, the traditional college-age population will have declined by 23 percent from its 1979 level. Fortunately, most of the decline in Mennonite youth of college age ended in fall, 1986.

The recent federal aid-to-education bill continues to provide an historically high level of student aid, but it reinforces the trend away from grants to a greater proportion of loans. Although they recognize that education is an excellent, lifelong investment, Mennonite youth and families are understandably reluctant to assume sharply higher levels of debt. Thus, while government dollars help us maintain our existing program, they offer no help in advancing toward our goals.

In November, the faculty consolidation committee reported its work to the Administrative Cabinet. We consulted further with departments and then made specific recommendations of $277,500 in savings: $109,850 from the administrative and staff area and $167,650 from academic departments. That is 2.8 percent of our current operating budget of $9.9 million. A sum of money was budgeted to give financial support to people who take early retirement or find other employment. The Board of Overseers and Mennonite Board of Education approved the consolidation in November and December.

The most drastic and controversial element of our consolidation was dropping majors in French and home economics. We are continuing the first two years of French. Future French majors can begin at Goshen and transfer as juniors to other colleges. The foods and nutrition major, presently offered within the home economics major, will be continued as a major within the Natural Science Division. Students wishing to major in home economics or home-economics education can take their first two years at Goshen and transfer to another college. Such arrangements will be similar to agreements we already have in engineering with Purdue University (Ind.) and Case Western Reserve (Ohio). Home-economics programs remain in two General Conference Mennonite Colleges. Our commitment to international education continues.

Colleges are reluctant to face hard facts about the future. As enrollment declines moved from predictions to realities in the 1970s, a poll of college presidents indicated that most of us believed that our own colleges would stabilize or increase and other colleges would continue to decline. Habitually focusing only on the current year's budget squeeze neglects realistic future planning. Stop-gap measures such as deferring maintenance and equipment purchases, cutting back on library purchases, neglecting salaries and wages and failing to inititate new programs are "remedies" for immediate problems but, over time, become recipes for general college decline.

Due to the 10 percent overall enrollment gain this fall, our current budget is balanced on paper without the need to use special gifts, assuming contributed support continues at last year's generous level. It is the strongest budget in several years; we need that strength to prepare for an even more competitive future. We also are determined to meet the Board of Overseers' policy goals cited above.

Faculty members already have begun a second phase of academic planning. Consistent with our mission, we are identifying learning goals and looking for creative ways to reflect these goals in our total educational program. For example, our home-economics faculty and alumnae are rightly concerned that the loss of this academic major not signal a neglect of family-life values. Education for Christian family life is more necessary than ever. There are opportunities in the nutrition, religion and social-work majors and in counseling services, campus ministry seminars for engaged couples and chapel and convocation programs to address this important concern. The faculty may consider this area so important that it should have a place in the general-education offerings all students take. Dean Willard Martin and the faculty welcome alumni counsel as we focus on our future educational program.

We also have begun an eight-year total resource-development campaign. This past year, Dan Kauffman worked as a special assistant to the president developing the campaign and its supporting materials. We plan to meet with small groups in many communities to share our vision for Goshen's future and how we all have a part in getting ready for our centennial in 1994.

We are committed to strengthening Goshen College. Although the structures of the educational program may change, those spiritual and educational values cherished by one generation and transmitted to another live on here.

Worship aims at celebration

By Del and Charlotte Holsopple Glick

"Worship and work must be one" wrote Fred Kaan 15 years ago in his song entitled, "Worship the Lord."

Worship and work will be one at Purdue 87 — the biennial convention for the Mennonite Church of North America that will convene July 7-12 on the Purdue University campus, West Lafayette, Ind. This gathering is primarily an opportunity to provide for representatives of the Mennonite Church to discuss, discern and take appropriate action on the needed business of the organization. In recent years, it has been held in conjunction with the popular Youth Convention.

Meanwhile, an adult convention has emerged along with attractive children's and young adult programming, seminars, displays, tours and media presentations. Calling it a "Mennonite family reunion" is accurate as this biennial experience has gone intergenerational, interracial and intercultural.

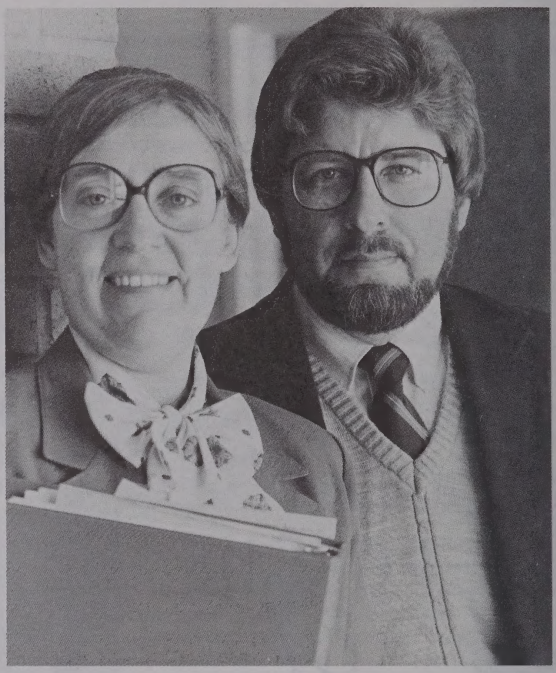
The approximately 2,000 youth and 4,000 adults and children at Purdue will also gather for worship. Probably no other dimension of our life together as congregations and a church-wide organization is as important and diverse as worship. Each of us brings our own background, values, likes, distastes and biases about what worship should be and could be. Each group across the Mennonite Church desires its own time and space.

The worship committee is keenly aware of the challenge of planning worship for several thousand persons in the midst of our uniqueness and diversity. Lee Lowery, inner-city Chicago pastor, sits on the committee alongside Steve Bustos, young adult from the Benton congregation in Goshen. Together they have prayed and laughed and shared brainstorms with Arlene Mark (Prairie Street, Elkhart), writer of worship resources, and Philip Clemens, minister of music and worship (College, Goshen).

Del and Charlotte Holsopple Glick, pastors of Waterford Mennonite Church, Goshen, chair the committee. Stan Shantz, youth convention coordinator, Galen Johns, adult convention coordinator, and Ralph Lebold, moderator-elect of the Mennonite Church, also serve on the committee.

The committee feels deeply about the need for corporate worship in the midst of our work together as a church. We want persons at Purdue to experience worship that includes celebration, participation, diversity and creativity.

First, authentic worship represents celebration. Celebration emerges from our experience of being a family, as new friendships are made, and we have opportunities to get reacquainted. We are a redeemed people, having been declared righteous by a holy God, as Paul says in Romans, the theme book for the week. In worship, we celebrate the sheer, unselfish and undeserved grace and mercy of God as we, a sinful people, meet a holy God face-to-face and respond accordingly.



The first corporate worship service for Purdue 87 participants (adults and children) — scheduled for Tuesday evening — will attempt to provide that kind of celebration for the gathering of God's Mennonite family. A brass ensemble coordinated by Goshen College professor Dennis Friesen-Carper, congregational singing led by Philip Clemens, plus other ingredients, will set the stage, both literally and figuratively, for a celebrative family reunion and picnic. Choirs from various congregations will help us join the celebration, and Jim Lapp, moderator of the Mennonite church, will give the keynote address.

Worship is also celebration because we are "people of the book," who attempt to keep Scripture at the center of our life together. The Written and Living Word will become alive as the convention focuses on the theme, "In Christ We Grow." Four 45-minute morning Bible studies will elaborate on this theme from the book of Romans and highlight major ideas: Brambles (Romans 1:18-3:20); Seeds (Romans 3:21-4:25); Sprouts (Romans 5:1-8:39) and Fruit (Romans 12:1-15:18). Praise moments, interpretive Scripture, testimonies and interviews celebrating the Good News will complement input from Wilma Bailey (Wednesday), Paul G. Landis (Thursday), Dan Yutzy (Friday) and Dorothy Jean Weaver (Saturday).

Second, true worship represents participation. It is doubtful that persons can just be spectators at Purdue 87! Granted, if worship is participatory, this means work, commitment and energy, but inspiration and excitement emerges from participation. Congregational litanies, responsive readings, singing and Scripture reading will invite us to be actively involved.

The two combined worship services for all registrants — children, youth, adults — will include participation from all age groupings. On Wednesday evening, Philip Clemens will be joined by Duane and Nancy Sider, song leaders for the youth convention, in leading congregational singing. The three youth moderators will work with Del and Charlotte Holsopple Glick, worship leaders for the adult/children services. Don Blosser and an interpretive presentation of Walter Wangerin's "The Ragman" will develop the "sin" motif from the first part of Romans.

The Sunday morning worship service will climax our week and experience together around the theme of "scattering." Vincent Martinez from New York City will stimulate our thinking. Jim Lapp and Ralph Lebold will portray the "passing of the mantle" as individuals, but all worshipers will also experience it corporately.

Third, inspirational worship represents diversity. The congregation in first-century Rome — one with much more diversity than the present Mennonite Church — was able to worship together in the midst of their theological, social, economic and racial differences. Such worship calls for sensitivity, openness and acceptance — white a cappella music alongside Black gospel with Hispanic rhythm, traditional hymns, jazz, contemporary Christian folk and Scripture songs.

The Friday and Saturday evening worship services for adults and children will, like the other services, celebrate our diversity. With the theme of "Maturing for Mission," Mary Cosby from Church of the Savior, Washington, D.C., will share her pilgrimage on Friday evening. (The next day, Cosby will lead a four-hour seminar on "Spiritual Discipline for Stewardship and Mission.") Drama, a children's choir, Scripture reading, congregational singing and input by Phil Bedsworth, pastor of Hesston Mennonite Church, are some of the ingredients for the Saturday evening theme, "The Happiness of Harvest."

Fourth, inspired worship is creative. We experience creativity in our worship when we affirm those with gifts for both clowning and preaching; singing and Scripture reading; banner making and trumpet blowing; videos and testimonies; silent meditation and the crashing cymbal, raised hands and bended knee.

As a committee, we trust that the evening worship services, the morning Bible studies and the combined worship experiences will provide models for congregational life and worship that are encouraging, affirming and unifying.

Come to Purdue 87! Come so that together we can cheerfully worship in our work and work at our worship as we meet our 1995 churchwide goals. A church that worships together in celebration, with participation, alongside diversity, in the midst of creativity can also accomplish goals together!

Purdue and GC

What's the connection between Goshen College and Purdue 87? Why are we devoting an issue of the Bulletin to an event sponsored by another church institution?

Since several people raised questions like these about the subject of this issue, I'd like to explain how we arrive at Bulletin themes.

Since the Bulletin assumed its present format in 1980, we have selected themes from three categories: those related to the Mennonite Church; those related to Goshen College and education in general, and those of general interest.

Beyond picking topics from these general areas, we have other practical considerations when we pick a theme. Do we have the writers who can address the issues with authority? Do we have a unique perspective, so that we can say something about an issue that is different from what other publications are saying? Can we cover the topic in some depth? Is the topic related to the general mission or philosophy of Goshen College? And, perhaps the most important consideration is whether the topic is one that will interest our 26,000 hetrogeneous readers.

We also attempt to vary the general areas we select to discuss. If we only selected issues being discussed in the Mennonite Church, for example, readers from other denominations would be bored.

In the case of Purdue 87, we selected it because it is an important event in the life of the Mennonite Church, and, since it is being held in Indiana, many GC faculty and staff are involved in the planning and as resource people.

If you have topics you would like to see discussed in the Bulletin, please let us know. — JDY

Delegates debate issues

By Barb Nickel

"It's like a big family reunion and a marathon church member's meeting," said Jim Lapp, moderator of the Mennonite Church General Assembly.

Purdue 87 will be, among other things, an opportunity for delegates from all over North America to debate important church issues.

And the issues promise to be tough.

The study of human sexuality and the 10-year goals will probably gain the most attention at Purdue, said Lapp. However, he added that other issues may develop an unanticipated delegate response, such as happened with minority leadership at Ames in 1985.

Dialogue on the issue of human sexuality will utilize Human Sexuality in the Christian Life, a congregational level study document adopted for action at Ames '85. The study deals with a broad range of sexuality issues and was developed as a working guide to help congregations deal with the issues raised, not as a position statement.

After the human sexuality committee received congregational responses to the document, it drew up a summary statement to be presented at Purdue. However, committee member Dr. Willard Krabill reported that only 61 out of 1,000 congregations have currently responded to the document.

"We can only respond to what we have received," said Krabill. "Many congregations are still in the study process, and others have no plans to deal with the issue at all. The statement at Purdue will be a very small sampling of congregational response."

Although response has been disappointingly low, Krabill sees the dialogue process itself as an important step for the church in dealing with a tough, controversial issue. He hopes the dialogue at Purdue will go beyond the homosexuality debate evident at Bethlehem '83 to a discussion of a wide range of sexuality issues, including divorce, male-female friendships, incest and singleness.

"We simply have to talk about sexuality in the church," said Krabill. "It is so important for us to move beyond the world's definition of sexuality and to see it as something in our minds and spirits as well as our bodies. Discussion of sexuality opens up a whole new realm of how men and women in the church relate to one another."

An update and renewal of commitment to the Mennonite Church 10-year goals, adopted for action at Ames '85, will also take center stage at Purdue. The goals grew out of a need for fresh understanding in the areas of church growth, stewardship and mission. Since Ames, church-wide agencies have been working toward an implementation of the plan to increase giving from five to 10 percent of income and to increase church membership by 50 percent. "I feel that there has been a broad enthusiasm for these goals," said Lapp. "Churches have been asking appropriate questions, as well as looking at the potential problems involved."

Although controversial issues have always caused debate at conventions such as Purdue, Lapp feels that there is room for development in dialogue methods. "In the past we have been too fearful of conflict and simply repressed our real feelings," he said. "I think the decision-making can be enhanced by a growth in our capacity to disagree."

Delegates will have plenty of material to digest. Besides the big issues of sexuality and the 10-year goals, issues such as Mennonite Church-General Conference Mennonite Church cooperation and a new confession of faith will also be up for discussion.

Some criticize the decision-making process as being too slow and lacking in authority when it is finished. Lapp agrees that the system is slow, but he believes the present method of processing issues through the church rectifies several weaknesses in the previous system.

"The criticism of earlier leaders in the Mennonite Church was that there was too much authority in the hands of too few people; they ran the church," he said. "The present system tries to open up the process so that it isn't just a few ministers making the decisions."

When people complain about how long it takes to process issues through local churches, Lapp replies that the more congregational method is truer to our theology of the church as a community where we test issues.

"It prevents a hierarchy from dominating the church," he said.

Besides being a time to debate issues, Purdue also will be the meeting place for a variety of special interest groups, from Deaf Ministries to the Fellowship of Concerned Mennonites. These groups use the occasion of the convention to meet for discussion and to set their own agenda for the coming year.

Purdue 87, the Mennonite family reunion, will bring together art, drama and song through joyful times of worship. It will celebrate diversity, even as it makes difficult decisions.

"The conference is a time of study and interaction, but also an important time of celebrating what God is doing through our church in the world," said Lapp.

Barb Nickel is a senior music major from Rosthern, Saskatchewan.

Youth conventions have lasting impact

Purdue 87 includes a youth convention as well as the adult assembly. Like previous youth conventions, it will attempt to stimulate young people to a deeper commitment to Christ and the community of faith. We asked four people to reflect on how youth conventions they attended have influenced their lives.

Ames changed goals

By Douglas Kaufman

The theme at Ames '85 was "To Know Christ Is To Serve." By realizing what Christ has done for me, I gained new excitement to follow his will through serving others. I also discovered practical ways I could serve others now, as a North American college student. During the past two years, two other GC students and I have been spending a lot of free time raising $20,000 to help a black South African woman to attend Goshen College.

Ames was a turning point in my Christian development. It helped change my career and life goals from a self-centered direction to a more selfless and Christ-like direction. It gave me a vision of the happiness to be found in losing my own life for the sake of others. The vision has led me to try to serve others daily, lead worship at church, fight apartheid in South Africa and work in a Nicaraguan refugee camp. Now I'm looking at which careers allow me to serve others the most.

The impression lasts

By Ron Milne

The youth convention in Oregon in 1961 began as a dream after I saw it advertised in a church publication. It became reality when my youth group decided to sponsor any member who would memorize I John — the study book for the convention. I remember spending the summer finding quiet places to memorize that Scripture, and, as a result, becoming one of four youth from East Goshen to have the honor of being sponsored.

As I reflect on that experience now, I realize that it had an influence on the way I thought about my church long after the event was over. I John became my favorite book of the Bible, and I have continued to draw upon it as a resource. The willingness of my youth group to work together through car washes and bake sales in order to send some representatives to the convention, and our responsibility to share what we could of that experience with them upon our return, were a powerful witness to me of our commitment to each other as Christians.

Finally, the opportunity to worship, study the Bible, and interact with a large group of Mennonite youth, many of whom I had never met before, helped me to understand and appreciate my denomination and what it stood for.

Ron Milne is associate professor of mathematics at GC.

Ames gave sense of identity

By Charlene Mast

Ames '85 was a very meaningful experience for me. Since I left Ames, many things have occurred, but one area in which I am still reminded of the convention is the "social aspect." My home community has few Mennonites. At Ames it was exciting for me to realize the background I actually came from. There's a special feeling knowing that there are others with the same beliefs and values. Seeing 2,000 Mennonite kids all together at one time was quite an experience.

Now as a freshman at Goshen College it's neat to recognize friends I met at the youth convention and to have the knowledge that there are others on campus who shared in the worship and growth that Ames offered.

Charlene Mast is a freshman elementary education major from Converse, Ind.

Mennonite diversity a surprise

By Ann Reedy

The 1985 youth convention in Ames, Iowa, made a big impression on me and how I see myself as a Mennonite. Coming from an urban community with a youth group of about 15 people, Ames really opened my eyes: I realized that Mennonites are very diverse and come from all sorts of backgrounds — many not similar to my own.

The speakers raised a number of important issues that Christians have to struggle with. Tom Sine especially made me think about the obligation I have to serve the rest of the world and the gifts I have to offer it.

Many of the friendships that started at Bethlehem and Ames have been reinforced here at Goshen, and it is surprising how many people say, when meeting for the first time, "You look so familiar! Were you at Ames?"

It is at these gatherings that connections begin to be established that will continue throughout one's life, and it is this factor as much as all of the speakers, concerts, singing and seminars, that make youth conventions so worthwhile.

Ann Reedy, a freshman at GC, is from Elkhart, Ind.

Computer program aids cancer research

Doug Swartzendruber '68, pathology professor at the University of Colorado, Colorado Springs, has teamed up with two other scientists to build and analyze a mathematical model of cancer. Michael Retsky, formerly an engineer with Hewlett-Packard, has developed the computer model. Doug's analysis will refine the information generated by his colleague's model, using a flow cytometer.

Flow cytometry involves lining up single cells in suspension and then measuring those cells as they pass through a laser beam. This process allows a researcher to distinguish abnormal cells from normal ones. The cytometer can measure levels of DNA in cells suspected of being cancerous. Normal cells have the same DNA count; malignant cells have abnormal DNA counts.

Doug and Mike Retsky hope to publish an article explaining their work this spring. They emphasize that their process is a tool for doctors, not a cure for cancer.

Pork production and health occupy MCC workers

Now in the second year of a three-year MCC assignment in Haiti, Marty '85 and Heidi Ulrich Gingerich '85 are working with a hog repopulation project, crop production and health education.

A little over five years ago, an outbreak of the incurable African Swine Fever (ASF) devastated the Haitian hog industry. Since then international service agencies have worked to replace Haiti's hogs. Marty assisted in that program in 1984 when he was the Iowa Pork Producers Associations' intern in Haiti for the service component of his SST.

Now Marty is involved in the project again, and Heidi, a nurse, teaches health education in their village. According to an article about their work in Iowa Pork Producer magazine, "Marty's daily work is with livestock and crop production. . . . They live in a village, Bois de Laurence, where it is obvious they have made a difference."

Soccer players named to All-America teams

Five members of the 1986 soccer team were named to national All-America teams in December. Junior goalkeeper J. Darin Derstine, Elkhart, Ind., was chosen for the National Soccer Coaches Association All-America team. Derstine and junior halfback Marc E. Zook, Goshen, received honorable mention for the NAIA All-America team.

Zook was one of four GC players named to the NAIA 1986 Academic All-America team. To qualify for the team, players must have grade-point averages of at least 3.4 on a 4.0 scale. No other NAIA school had more than two players on the team.

The other Academic All-Americans were junior fullback Jeffrey B. Aeschliman, Salem, Ore.; senior halfback Kenton L. Longenecker, Lancaster, Pa., and junior fullback Jeffrey L. Smucker, Bird-in-Hand, Pa.

Gerber breaks women's scoring record

Junior business major Dawn Gerber took care of some unfinished business Jan. 31. The six-foot center for the women's basketball team had tied the GC women's single-game scoring record — 31 points — Dec. 11. She shared the record with Susan Becher '77, who set the record, and Patricia Albrecht Yoder '80, who tied it in the 1979-80 season.

Playing at Hanover College Jan. 31, Gerber scored 32 points — a fact she didn't realize until after the game, which GC lost, 69-63.

"I had no idea I had made it," she said. "I was really down about losing the game; I thought we should have won. When they told me I had broken the record, I felt a little better."

Her parents are James and Carol Gerber of Brutus, Mich., where her father is pastor of the Maple River Mennonite Church.

Gerber is one of the co-captains of the Lady Maple Leaf team, which had an 8-13 record. With five freshmen, three sophomores and two juniors, the entire team can return for the 1987-88 season.

"We're a young team, but we're learning to work together," Gerber said. "We just need time to adjust to each other's ways of playing."

Three-point shots boost Leafs

Three has been a happy number for the men's basketball team this year. During the week of Jan. 26, the Leafs ranked ninth among all NAIA teams in the nation in percentage of three-point shots scored — 51.5 percent.

While the team hasn't won any games on a last-second three-point shot, three-point shots have helped the Leafs either stay ahead or close gaps in several games, the coach said. The team had an 8-20 record.

Summer at GC: Special weeks for high school students

A new Marine Biology Week June 20-28 has been added to the line-up of summer activities for high school students at Goshen College.

Biology professor Jonathan Roth will lead 20 students through the collecting, observing and mapping of marine life around Layton on Long Key, Fla. Students will live in Goshen's Marine Biology Station, home of a similar annual program for college students.

Music and Computer Weeks will be June 14-19 this year.

High school students in both groups will live on campus, working with professors and college student assistants in intensive "hands-on" practice, study and performance.

Music week participants will perform in one or more concerts throughout the week, including programs of classical, jazz, choir and chamber music. Vocalists and instrumentalists are both eligible.

Computer students will be divided into groups according to their experience. The week is an excellent review for students who plan to try for credit by examination in "Programming I" at Goshen College.

Piano Week for Teachers and Students June 14-20 is open to all piano teachers and their students of junior high or high school age. Guest performers and lecturers will include Donald Walker, University of Northern Illinois, on stylistic interpretation, and Arthur Becknell of the University of Wisconsin, Madison, on rhythmic response and improvisation.

For more information about Marine Biology, Computer and Music Weeks, write to the Office of Admissions, Goshen College, Goshen, IN 46526. For more about Piano Week, write to the Music Department at Goshen College.

Malaysian minister will be commencement speaker

Approximately 230 Goshen College students will graduate at the 89th commencement of Goshen College at 3 p.m. April 12, but one of them — Amanda L. Dutton — will listen to the commencement speaker with special interest.

That's because the commencement speaker is her father, the Rev. Dr. Denis C. Dutton, a leader of the Methodist Church in Malaysia.

The Rev. Dr. Dutton, 52, is pastor of Wesley Methodist Church, Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, and president of the annual conference of the Methodist Church of Malaysia. He received a licentiate in theology in 1958 from Trinity Theological College, Singapore; a B.A. in 1963 from Ohio Wesleyan University, a B.D. in 1965 from Duke University Divinity School and a D.Min. in 1983 from New York Theological Seminary.

In 1984, the Rev. Dr. Dutton celebrated his silver anniversary as a pastor. When he was ordained an elder in 1954, he was the youngest ever in the history of the Methodist Church in Malaysia. He and his wife, Emme, have four children, including two Goshen College students: Amanda, an August, 1987, graduate in foods and nutrition, and Lynda, a sophomore majoring in natural science.

Admission to commencement is by ticket available from the graduating seniors. Both the baccalaureate service and commencement will be broadcast by WGCS.

Book review

A call to social holiness

By Thelma Miller Groff '44

Journey Towards Holiness by Alan Kreider '62 is a book about spirituality without claiming to be that. It says a lot about deep matters in a readable style peppered with humor and lively images.

Alan Kreider, a former teacher at GC, has lived in London, England, for most of the last 20 years. With his wife, Eleanor Graber Kreider '57, he directs the Cross-Currents Programme, a teaching ministry of the London Mennonite Center — a center for Christian training, thinking and renewal under the sponsorship of the Mennonite Board of Missions. Alan also serves as an elder in the London Mennonite Fellowship.

He brings to his writing the insights of one long-since committed to living social holiness. He also brings the perspectives of an Anabaptist and an historian with a Ph.D. from Harvard (1971).

With these perspectives Kreider stirs the waters in the sea of books on Christian living in a fresh way. Where else does the call to discipleship and holiness emerge from a long and penetrating look at God's encounters with people from Old Testament times until the present?

The overview is powerful; the perspective exhilarating. To come to more clarity on what God wants from men and women by carefully considering what God has been asking of them in history gives the reader a firm sense of rootedness. The reader rediscovers not only the hopes and purposes of God, but also God's commitment to those who live into the vision! Kreider says at the outset of his book that he wants to retell the Bible story in such a way that readers will feel called to new dimensions of holy living. He achieves that goal for me, and it is both satisfying and stimulating.

That holiness is social is the thesis of the book. Kreider believes that to be God's people is to live justice, peace and goodwill together. It cannot be otherwise.

This idea is not altogether unique, of course; many writers decry a spirituality that is other-worldly. However, Kreider skillfully manages to make it foundational and central. He deftly arouses our imagination as to how social holiness can more and more become reality now and in the future.

Journey Towards Holiness, by Alan Kreider, is published by Herald Press, Scottdale, Pa., and Kitchener, Ontario, in a quality trade paperback (0-8361-3423-0) with 304 pages at $9.95 ($13.95 in Canada).

Persons eager to define a "Mennonite Spirituality" will particularly benefit from this book, a contribution well-timed.

Thelma Miller Groff, Goshen, Ind., is a former teacher at Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries in the area of spirituality and currently leads retreats and does spiritual mentoring.

'Late-blooming' poet lectures

A self-described "late-bloomer" who wrote her first poem at age 35 told audiences at Goshen College Feb. 10-12 that no one is too old to start writing.

"I write poetry because I have to," Colleen McElroy, a poet, short-story writer and novelist from Seattle, Wash., said in the annual S.A. Yoder Memorial Lecture Feb. 11. "I have a need to see what's on the other side of the mountain."

McElroy, 51, is a professor of English and director of the creative writing program at the University of Washington. Her best known work is Queen of the Ebony Isles, a book of poetry that won the Before Columbus American Book Award. Five other volumes of her poetry have been published and another, Bone Flames, will be published soon by Wesleyan University Press.

Besides writing poetry, short stories and novels, she recently wrote a play, "Follow the Drinking Gourd," about Harriet Tubman. She also has written television scripts for WGBH, Boston.

McElroy said her childhood as the only child of a career Army man and his wife probably helped her develop her imagination because the family moved frequently, and she rarely had close friends.

Another factor in the development of her imagination was that "I did not grow up in the world of television," she added. "Even though I write for that medium, I have real reservations about it. I also have real reservations about computers. Those machines allow immediate reward. Imagination does not allow immediate reward — there's a lag."

Taking risks to lead

By Sanna Yoder

"To aspire to leadership is an honorable ambition," said Jim Lapp, quoting I Tim. 3:1 for Goshen College students in a late January chapel.

Lapp's address, "Where Will We Find All the Leaders?," encouraged students to watch for ways in which they can use their talents and abilities towards God's intentions, especially towards leadership in the church.

People who are motivated by a transcendent power, Lapp said, "are willing to risk an uncertain future with confidence in a sovereign and loving God, opening themselves to a variety of styles of working, including leadership and all its vulnerabilities."

Lapp knows those risks firsthand. He has opened himself to "leadership and its vulnerabilities" many times. As a guide for the spiritual life of a campus; as a congregational minister; and as "the legs" of a denomination's general board, he has weighed the risks of responsibility and then committed himself to the growth of those organizations.

His brand of careful leadership isn't the easiest; his future has often been uncertain. As a younger man, Lapp remembers being surprised when asked to function as a leader "beyond what I think I am capable of." He has entered many positions, such as class president during college, "with fear and trembling."

Lapp has served as a pastor in Elkhart, Ind., Perkasie, Pa., and Albany, Ore. He has been conference moderator and served on numerous church committees. And after being campus minister and General Board executive secretary, he plans to re-enter the congregational ministry.

Part of Lapp's careful approach to leadership stems from his understanding of how God "calls" His people to vocation. Lapp believes that gifts, opportunity, need and the Holy Spirit all play a part in such choices. Rather than responding to a mysterious bolt out of the blue, Lapp first asks, "What is God up to in the world?" Then, "What are my abilities?" And finally, "How can my abilities best be used to work for what God is up to?"

Most recently, Lapp's abilities have met opportunity as part of the Campus Ministries team with his wife Nancy. In that capacity, rather than relying on his own strength as a speaker and counselor, he has risked enabling others to develop the same abilities. Under his and Nancy's leadership, the Campus Ministries team has enlarged to include three student leaders each year. Those student leaders help oversee such programs as Community Voluntary Service, World Christian Fellowship, mentoring, 14 small groups and informal campus worship services.

"Jim's biggest gift is that he enables and empowers others," said dean of student development Norman Kauffmann. "He has extended his ministry by developing gifts in other people."

While growing student involvement in voluntary service, worship and small groups have taken place among students most open to those elements of Christian life, Lapp was still haunted by the question, "How do we reach the student who is more skeptical of his or her Christian faith?"

The "Campus Ministries Menu," a flier outlining spiritual growth opportunities at Goshen, this year included a note "for skeptics only." It said, in part, "At Goshen, there is a place for everyone — including skeptics — to search for, test and hopefully discover a credible faith."

He and Nancy have also invited various groups of students who have expressed questions about their faith into their home for evening meals.

"Jim is asking students who need a little more space and distance to help him understand the campus atmosphere from their perspective," Kauffmann explained.

It is with similar seriousness of purpose, and a mix of "fear and trembling," that Lapp embarks on his next venture in leadership.

The decision to take the position as executive secretary to the general board was another case of opportunity and circumstances colliding with need. "There are others just as well-equipped or better for such a position; it's just that my life circumstances have moved in a certain way that I can be open to taking on this position at this time."

As with many others of Lapp's leadership jobs, he has considered the risks. For example, how will he best be able to hear the needs and concerns of congregations, conferences and the denomination without considering his own personal agenda?

"A board has very little ability to operate independently from its staff, but neither does the staff operate independently from the board," Lapp said. "My new role is simply to become the legs of this board."

Lapp comes to the board at what he considers a crucial time; never content to work with just maintenance issues, he looks forward to working with questions at the center of the Mennonite Church's direction, such as:

- How can the Mennonite Church think more futuristically? How can its goals be set within the context of societal change?
- How will the ever-stronger church conferences interrelate with the larger denomination?
- How can we best reach our 10-year goals?
- What are some new ways we can develop leadership for the church, especially among women and minorities?
- What roles do young adults play in the church?

"Looking at these issues is not exciting in the sense of a roller coaster ride," Lapp said. "But it is rewarding and even occasionally exhilarating to think that we're going beyond maintenance questions to those that are at the heart of our mission. This is where new light will break through, where windows will open."

The questions may be at the heart of who we are as God's people, but leaders like Lapp can remind us of the rewards of risking to answer them.

Growth in Christ

By Victor Stoltzfus

"In Christ, We Grow" is the theme of Purdue 87, the next Mennonite General Assembly in West Layfayette, Ind. From time to time, controversy emerges at such church meetings. In this instance, the theme itself is controversial — or would be if Christians were in sharper debate with the secular-opinion molders of our time.

The Enlightenment Era of the past 200 years assumes that religion retards human growth. Speaking of priests in the general sense of all religious clergy, Thomas Jefferson wrote, "In every country and in every age, the priest has been hostile to liberty. He is always in alliance with the despot, abetting his abuses in return for protection to his own." The editor of the Valparaiso University (Missouri Synod Lutheran) alumni bulletin wrote recently, "It is difficult to exaggerate the degree of isolation of Christian belief from the reigning intellectual mind-set. The problem is not so much that the answers of faith are rejected; it is rather that faith's questions are not entertained in the first place. Orthodox Christians in the modern world dwell in an intellectual backwater."

Fortunately the "backwaters" are discovering and networking with each other. Christian colleges and Harper and Row are publishing supplementary textbooks that will raise and discuss faith and learning issues in eight academic areas. The Christian legal society is acting to protect our right to preferential hiring of Christians, a privilege currently under court challenge. Christians within academic specializations meet and publish scholarly journals. There are 800 members of the Christian Philosophical Association. A major public television program on the origins of life from a Christian viewpoint is being produced with a major contribution from Goshen alumnus and Harvard astronomer, Owen Gingerich. Christians are on the verge of having a greater impact on intellectual life in America.

Does Christianity "grow" persons with disciplined minds and large human capacity? Are we inventive, imaginative, even playful in spirit? Do we have leaders whose wisdom clarifies goals and whose courage energizes followers? Do Church institutions make an unmistakable contribution to the health, education, and public good of our communities? Our world? Does the Christian contribution to music, drama and literature nourish the human spirit? Is the Christian community so attractive that persons of high potential come to faith and mature in character?

Our report card is mixed. The awkwardness of being "in but not of the world" has tempted some Christians to defensive isolation. As Richard Halverson, Chaplain to the U.S. Senate, phrases it, "making enemies out of everyone but the real enemy." Others yield too much to secular "faith." A Christian liberal arts college is at its finest when it fulfills a clear mission and provides a "wise blend of freedom and guidance." Historian Martin Marty recently said that a college should be like a greenhouse with broken glass and doors off the hinges. We need nutrients and protection but also the challenge of contrary opinion and chilly breezes to become hardy.

I asked several people on campus about growth at Goshen College. One student said that growth came when her securities were removed. She may have meant: first adjustments to college, international study and service, questions about the transition to life after college. Another student spoke of growth in quiet moments of reflection. Anne Hershberger, professor of nursing, said, "Students grow when they have an opportunity to contribute something significant in ways that are personally satisfying."

A few weeks ago I toured a factory and saw the impersonal, mechanical "growth" of plastic pipe. Hot raw materials were extruded through a die and cooled, cut and stacked in a continuous flow. About the same time, I heard a student share a spiritual biography that was not at all like predictable pipe production. There were fits and starts, conflicting loyalties, painful times of indecision; in all, an uneven growth that only made sense in hindsight. As I reflect on this student's story, I believe that she has made a down payment on future stability. John Gardner refers to "the crises of middle age brought on by early commitment to values too shallow to endure for a lifetime."

The Student Development Division at Goshen College defines its task as helping students grow. "The primary task of the Student Development Division is to provide leadership enabling students to achieve appropriate levels of self-direction and interdependence, and make meaningful and purposeful choices in regard to religious faith, occupational and personal lifestyle. The goal is to provide a balance of challenge and support in which students are enabled to grow toward physical, emotional, spiritual, intellectual and interpersonal maturity."

Communities that are geographically or culturally cut off from the marketplace of ideas will enter into the theme, "In Christ, We Grow," at Purdue 87 and explore its continuity within a folk tradition. Christian liberal arts colleges, however, must engage a hostile secularity. We face the blunt fact that a sometimes tolerant, sometimes hostile society is working to narrow our circle of influence. We must compete for loyalty during the life-decision years of young people. In this sense, the theme of Purdue's Assembly is a militant claim, similar to the first century, "Jesus is Lord."

Even as its creative energies are waning, we acknowledge that the Enlightenment Era has made valuable contributions. It deserves credit for reminding Christians that human growth is also our agenda. As missionary Leslie Newbigen writes, "The 'light' in the Enlightenment was real." Christians challenge not its freedom of inquiry or dedication to growth but its blindness to the the "Light of the world."

"In Christ, We Grow."

Afro - American experience at Goshen College

Dominic Jolly, GC sophomore from Cleveland Heights, Ohio

Afro - American experience deserves attention

Usually alumni magazines emphasize the positive side of college life — achievements, awards, approachable faculty and friendly students. But if we are honest we know that not every student who comes to GC has an experience like the ones described in the recruiting material.

One look at the statistics on Afro-American enrollment and graduation from Goshen College and it is obvious that minority students have not been flocking to GC for their college education. Nor, despite the good intentions of the administration, have we been able to attract Afro-American faculty. Presently, Lee Roy Berry is the only tenured Afro-American member of the teaching faculty, and he is part time. There are no Afro-American administrators.

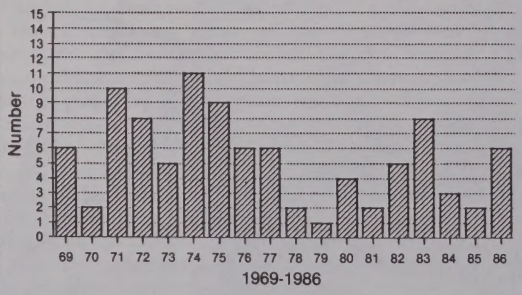
To help all of us understand the experience of minorities on the GC campus, we asked present and former Afro-American students to reflect on their years at GC. They point out a number of problems that can make GC a difficult place for minority students.

Joy Lovett, the only Afro-American on the GC Board of Overseers, focused the issue sharply: GC has an obligation to model what the church ought to be — a leader in promoting racial understanding. At present it reflects too much of the racial attitudes of white-American society, which does not value Blacks.

We hope that by giving these concerns more visibility, non-Afro-Americans, on and off the campus, will examine their attitudes toward Afro-Americans. For whites to become aware of these problems is a modest beginning toward solving them.

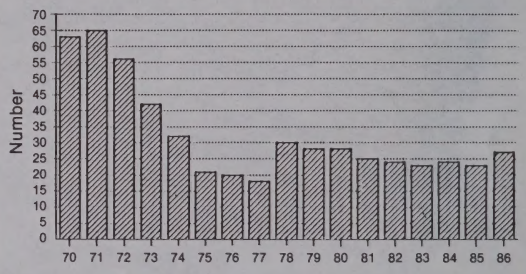
In focusing on the Afro-American experience at GC, we recognize that we have not touched on the experience of other minorities or the experience of international students, many of whom are also Black. The experience of those groups deserves discussion, too, in another issue of the Bulletin. — JDY

Afro-American graduates 1969-86



According to registrar John Nyce, there were eight Afro-American graduates in the 21 years between 1947 and 1968. The total number of Afro-American graduates from 1947 to 1986 is 104. Data on 1987 graduates will not be complete until December.

Afro-American enrollment



Statistics on Afro-American enrollment at GC are incomplete before 1970. As a percentage of the total student body, Afro-Americans have ranged from 5.9 percent in 1971-72 to 1.7 percent in 1977-78. In the 1980s the percentage has risen from 1.8 percent in 1980-81 to 2.8 percent in 1987.

Bridging the cultural gap

By Tony Brown

As a former Goshen College student and member of the faculty and Board of Overseers, I have had a vital and longstanding relationship with Goshen College.

In the late 1960s and early 1970s, Goshen College recruited a significant number of Afro-American students. Most of these students came to Goshen without prior knowledge of, or experience with Mennonites. Generous financial aid programs offered by the federal government and genuine interest conveyed by Goshen College representatives gave impetus to the emergence of larger numbers of Afro-American students on the campus.

The decision to actively recruit Afro-American students was made during the Mininger administration and was influenced by the prevailing national movement for racial justice in America. Many colleges and universities in the country responded in a similar fashion during this period. Goshen College, like many other colleges and universities, had good intentions. However, the college and the Goshen community did not have adequate understanding and cultural sophistication to comfortably relate to the Afro-American students.

In time Afro-American students learned that the preservation of a Mennonite identity and cultural ethos at the college was a major agenda for the administration and the Mennonite constituency. They knew little about the extent to which Mennonites had historically taken pride in being separate from the world. They did not know that they would enter a somewhat exclusive ethnic community. As a result, Afro-American students felt the sharp value, ethnic, and cultural differences between them and the Mennonite community.

At the same time, some Afro-American students experienced little validation or understanding of their culture by the college community. While an intellectual sense of fairness and equality characterized the general mood of the times, there was also a sense in which Afro-Americans were perceived as fish out of water on the Goshen College campus. Such perceptions run the risk of widening the already-existing cultural gap dividing these two groups.

The concepts of fairness and equality have merit in the abstract. However, they come alive in the concrete when Blacks and whites examine the extent to which they negatively value the other. This is a tall order for Afro-American students, who are at a developmental period when they need to be valued for their difference in order to consolidate a healthy ethnic identity. Lack of affirmation and acceptance often results in a reactive distance from the majority culture as a way to cope and protect oneself from life in a hostile environment.

It too is a tall order for European-American Mennonites who may find it difficult to see how they can be personally enhanced and positively changed by engaging in meaningful relationships with Afro-Americans without fear of losing their cultural and ethnic identity.

Today a true commitment to the Afro-American experience at Goshen College must come from within the institution instead of as a reaction to social influences of the times. Since the national commitment to racial justice has significantly waned, so has the number of Afro-American students attending Goshen College. In addition, Afro-American students need the support of the Black communities in the Elkhart and South Bend area. This community support has historically proven to be a major factor ensuring Black survival in America.

Finally minority faculty and administrative staff who are familiar with the Anabaptist tradition and are comfortable with their own difference must be hired in increasing numbers. Such persons can serve as important role models for Black and white students.

Reaching across cultural boundaries is more than just a good idea. Genuine open relationships are characterized in part by emotional involvement and investment. When this happens, our college motto, Culture for Service, may then need to read Service for Culture.

Nevertheless, Goshen College is an academic institution of great quality. Many Afro-American alumni value their experience at Goshen College and affirm its academic strength. However, at a time when racial indifference and insensitivity typify the national mood, alumni, faculty and staff have a unique opportunity to work toward creating a community of greater racial understanding at Goshen College. Then we can claim indeed to be a people separate from the world. I commit myself to that challenge.

Tony Brown, a 1971 GC graduate, is a psychotherapist at the counseling center of the University of Washington and professor in human services at Western Washington University. He worked in the GC student development division from 1971 to 1975, was a member of the GC board of overseers from 1975 to 1980 and associate professor of social work at GC from 1980 to 1983. He received his M.S.W. from the University of Pennsylvania in 1979.

GC was helpful and painful

By Donald Green

Although I came away from Goshen College a better person for having attended, I could not wholeheartedly recommend it to a minority student. I say that because Goshen was not the easiest place to feel a part of or be comfortable at.

As a person who is able to "pass" and as one who never felt comfortable wearing a sign that declared one's race (no one else had to), I've seen Goshen from a unique perspective.

What I saw was a strong undercurrent of racism: racial prejudice was expressed openly, and the college was inattentive to complaints about it. Goshen will need to make a lot of changes if it expects to have a significant minority presence and for minorities to feel a part of the school. While I attended, Goshen did not seem interested in making those changes.

Having attended an inner-city high school, I came to Goshen unprepared for the academics. In high school nothing was expected from me, and it was not hard to rise above those expectations. Goshen was the first place I was ever challenged in a classroom, and at first, the challenge was hard to meet.

My best experience in the classroom came in Theron Schlabach's American and Afro-American history classes. In Afro-American history class, I learned how Afro-American history is interwoven with American history and how understanding one requires an understanding of the other.

Another teacher that affected me was Lee Roy Berry. He often expressed concern for my progress while I was at Goshen, not only in his classroom, but outside it as well.

The best experience I had through Goshen was SST in Belize, Central America. I constantly tell people about being in Belize, but I learned so much from just living, seeing, hearing, listening and experiencing that it is hard to explain. I do know that Belize offered me the opportunity to no longer be a minority.

When I told a friend that I'd been asked to write this article, she told me that they'd picked the right person because I always talk positively about Goshen. In the years I spent there, I made a lot of friends, and I learned a lot. It has had a tremendous effect on me as a person. I feel that strongly now when I come to grips with my feelings about justice and service to a community.

So I guess what I'm trying to say is that although my experiences at Goshen were at times painful and disconcerting, I feel that I'm a better person for having gone to Goshen College.

Goshen had special people

By Sharon B. Pritchett Hurt

I was born and raised in Gary, Ind., by my mother. We lived in an all-Black neighborhood, and I attended all-Black schools, graduating from Gary Roosevelt in 1967.

My childhood was rather normal with a few abnormalities from time to time. Generally, it always seemed like it was mom and I against the world. She was a fighter, and I learned a lot about life and surviving in the process.

During my senior year in high school a representative from Goshen College visited my high school looking for minority students to enter their nursing program. Since I had thought of being a nurse or teacher, I pursued the opportunity. Much to my surprise I was selected and started at Goshen during the summer-school session.

Coming from the city life of Gary, Goshen College was a tremendous change for me. My summer was plagued with emotional and academic frustrations. This experience nearly shattered my self-concept and confidence. I had graduated from high school with better than a "B" average, a fact that I was very proud of, but this average meant nothing in comparison to the competition I faced among my Mennonite peers.

Just being a minority on the campus was an extremely uncomfortable feeling, without the frustrations of academic failures. I often thought about the college's goal of offering opportunities to Blacks. It was a noble and rewarding gesture, but simply offering opportunities and opening doors was not enough. We needed people to work alongside us and counsel with us, and that was an important missing link.

I felt that I was living in two worlds, one on the campus and the other when I returned home. I got tired of people in Gary saying that I had changed. I did, that's true, but not like they thought. In order to survive, I had to change my way of living and accept new ideas. My living style had to change, and the emotional adjustments were difficult to handle and even more difficult to verbalize, especially to the counselors on campus.

During that first summer I met many wonderful people — students and professors — who offered all kinds of assistance. These folks had little knowledge of my background and what it felt like to be a minority on the campus. But they were all friendly — some just out of politeness and curiosity. Others were curious but willing to accept me for the person I was without reservation or racial bias.

My best friend, Joyce (Stahly) Ropp and I spent many hours trying to sort out my frustrations and build my self-confidence. If I had not met Joyce and other great people at Goshen, I would not have finished.

Although my mother was always behind me, she never wanted her child to suffer, so she often told me to give it up and come home. The offer was certainly inviting on many occasions when I studied as hard as I could and still came up short on an exam.

Fortunately, Joyce was always there to offer an encouraging word. Even after she transferred from Goshen, I always knew she was there.

In addition to the people I met at GC, I received a good foundation in my academic field. After I returned from Jamaica during my sophomore year, I switched majors and entered elementary education. During my junior year things started to fall into place. My grades improved tremendously, my professors for the most part were more receptive, caring and understanding. I combined their teachings with my personal experiences and emerged a much better individual with a broader understanding of people.

I am thankful that I had the opportunity to attend Goshen College. I know that I received a quality education, but most of all the people that I met helped me to blossom into the person that I am today. I know now that God had a lot more in store for me than what I envisioned for myself many years ago.

Although I am not a Mennonite, the imprint of my years at Goshen College will forever remain. The positives certainly outweighed the negatives.

White ignorance is a problem

By Ian Walker

I was born in Cleveland, Ohio, and raised a Baptist. I attended inner-city schools until I was of high school age. At that point I moved from Cleveland to live and attend high school in a small Mennonite community. This move brought a major change in lifestyle for me.

I chose Goshen College after visiting one weekend, during which I enjoyed the pleasant atmosphere. Goshen College also has a very good social work department, which caught my eye because that was my intended major.

My encounter with Mennonites has been challenging, yet fulfilling because I realized how important it is for Black people to know and understand themselves so that we can teach others what we are.

Many white people here at GC are ignorant of the Black culture and instead of searching for facts they assume the worst about Blacks. This for me is very frustrating because these assumptions turn into cruel comments and sometimes can lead to violence.

I find myself drained from constantly answering questions about Blacks and teaching people that the Black culture has produced great people and possesses (surprisingly to many whites) doctors, lawyers, inventors, entertainers, political leaders, mayors. We're not all athletes.

Sometimes I ask myself, "Why is it that Blacks have to prove our race to be a 'worthwhile' race, while whites don't have to prove anything? Ever."

Goshen College is not conducive to a good experience for Black people. The main reason is because racism is still percolating. We all must confront it, deal with it and work to exterminate it. The first step is to admit that racism still exists. Pretending it does not is just like sweeping dirt under a rug: the pile gets bigger and bigger.

Having more Black students and Black faculty members would be a great step in making GC a more pleasant campus for Black people.

Ian Walker is a junior at GC majoring in social work.

It's difficult to feel at ease

By Toni Brown

I am from Scottdale, Pa., which most people here at Goshen College know as the home of the Mennonite Publishing House. I attended Southmoreland Senior High School, a public school attended by over half of Scottdale's young people. Unlike many Black students, I was raised and baptized in Kingview Mennonite Church.

Living in Scottdale and Goshen is very much alike. They're both predominantly Mennonite and white towns. However, I feel like a minority in Goshen, whereas I didn't in Scottdale.

Many of the students at Goshen College haven't had experiences with Black people. I realize that it is hard for these people, but it is just as hard for us. All our lives we've been struggling to survive in a "white man's" world and now it's been narrowed to a small campus where we are "supposed" to feel comfortable, but we are still struggling to make our lives as Black students pleasant.

We can't even enjoy the time spent with the Black Student Union (Black support group) without someone wondering what we're "up to" or questioning the reason for the group's existence.

I have had positive experiences with both Black and white students. But it's still hard for me to feel at ease on Goshen College's campus.

This year the Black Student Union has been crying out to GC's people for unity. It can be done, but we as Black students can't do it alone.

Toni Brown is a sophomore at GC majoring in elementary education.

Hardaway works as counselor

Oliver Hardaway '70 came to Goshen from Laurel, Miss., on the advice of a friend he met in the civil rights movement. At first he had difficulty with the academic work: many students had a broader background in math, science and writing skills. For his first assignment in creative writing, he hurriedly wrote a few lines and handed his paper in. The teacher smiled, then explained to him what he wanted. After this experience he gradually learned to love writing.

With the help of roommates, tutors and concerned teachers, he graduated on time, even though he participated in track. Now he writes short stories and poetry and hopes to have a book of fiction published.

As an African-Methodist he experienced culture shock at GC, but after studying Mennonite beliefs, he learned to understand them.

After teaching for a year in Saginaw, Mich., and a time of alternative service in Clarksdale, Miss., he moved to Memphis, where for the past 10 years he has worked for the Tennessee Department of Human Services as a counselor. Graduates hear Malaysian pastor

Being a Christian in Asia is much more difficult than being a Christian in the West, a Methodist minister from Malaysia told Goshen College graduates at their commencement April 12.

"If you claim to be a Christian (in Asia), you will have to know why," the Rev. Dr. Denis C. Dutton, Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, said. "In my country, to be a Christian is not advantageous. If you are a Muslim, that is advantageous."

The question for the Asian church is "not only who the Christ is, but where is the Christ?" Dutton said. "More and more people must align themselves with the poor, the oppressed and the marginalized."

"Asia's greatest enemies are not the superpowers of the world," he said. The continent's "enemies" are illiteracy, poverty, overpopulation, lack of peace with justice, dumping of nuclear waste, militarization, "the politics of plunder" and racial and religious disharmony, Dutton said.

Celebrating graduation are: Ian Walker '88, Sally Ondiek '83, Patricia Muganda '87 and Palesa Makhale '89.

In the baccalaureate service that morning, the graduates heard Goshen College president Victor Stoltzfus speak on Matthew 7:24-27, the parable of the man who built his house on rock and the man who built his house on sand.

In the commencement ceremonies, 40 bachelor of science in nursing and 193 bachelor of arts degrees were awarded. One certificate in Hispanic ministries was awarded and the nine China Exchange Program scholars received certificates in English.

Named to the Mid-Central Conference's All-Conference basketball team, second team: Tim Springer, a junior from Saybrook, Ill., a forward.

Student receives NSF, Mellon fellowships

Richard H. Beyler, a senior history and mathematics major, received two major grants for graduate study. He has accepted a National Science Foundation Graduate Fellowship which covers the cost of tuition and provides a stipend. Beyler will study the history of science at Harvard University.

He also received a Mellon Fellowship in the Humanities, one of 122 students in the United States to receive such a fellowship. It was the first time a Goshen College student had received a Mellon fellowship. The Mellon program is intended to encourage especially capable students to pursue careers in higher education. Because Beyler also accepted the NSF fellowship, he had to accept the Mellon Fellowship on an honorary basis.

A 1982 graduate of Hesston (Kan.) High School, Beyler is the son of Gladys Beyler, Goshen, and the late Clayton Beyler, who was a faculty member at Hesston College.

Grants awarded two faculty members

Two GC faculty members will begin research this summer made possible by grants they recently received.

Judith M. Davis, associate professor of French, was awarded a $4,000 grant for summer research by the Indiana Committee for the Humanities. She will travel to France in June and July to research miracle plays about the Virgin Mary written in Old French in the 13th century and later.

In France Davis will work at the Institute of Medieval Studies in Poitiers and at the Institute of Research and History of Texts in Paris, compiling a bibliography and researching the manuscript tradition for prose and verse narrative miracles.

After returning to the United States, Davis will complete a computerized bibliography of the miracle plays, translate excerpts from them and prepare a lecture and a scholarly article.

Stanley N. Grove, associate professor of biology, received a $21,000 Cottrell College Science Program grant from the Research Corporation to conduct research in molecular genetics.

Grove will investigate how genes control the process of sporulation (the making of spores) in common baker's yeast. He will analyze the structure and functions of cloned yeast DNA (genetic material), implant it into bacteria and chemically analyze it.

Grove became interested in research with yeast while doing post-doctoral work on sabbatical in 1985-86 at the University of Notre Dame with Dr. Mary Clancy.

Retirees honored at banquet

Six retiring faculty members were honored May 1 at the annual Faculty Spring Banquet.

Al Albrecht, professor of communication; Mary E. Bender, professor of French; Mary K. Nafziger, professor of education; Mary Oyer, professor of music; Art A. Smucker, director of computer services and professor of chemistry, and J. Harold Yoder, professor of physical education, are retiring.

Albrecht, a 1950 GC graduate, received a master's degree from Purdue University and a doctoral degree from Indiana University. He joined the GC faculty in 1964.

Albrecht received a plaque March 23 from the National Intercollegiate Peace Speech Association recognizing his 23 years of service to the organization. He helped found the association and has served as executive secretary since 1978.

Bender, also a 1950 GC graduate, received a master's and a doctoral degree from Indiana University and joined the GC faculty in 1955 after teaching two years at Hesston College.

Nafziger, a 1947 GC graduate, received a master's degree from George Peabody College for Teachers and a doctoral degree from Northwestern University. She joined the faculty in 1950 after teaching in the community schools of Pekin, Ill., and Goshen.

Oyer, a 1945 GC graduate, received master's and doctoral degrees from the University of Michigan and also studied at the University of Glasgow. She is completing a two-year MCC assignment in Kenya, where she has been collecting and preserving native African music.

Upon returning to the United States in August, Oyer will work part time on the revision of The Mennonite Hymnal.

Smucker, a 1949 GC graduate, received a master's and a doctoral degree from the University of Illinois and joined the GC faculty in 1954. Before becoming director of computer services, he chaired the chemistry department, and, with his wife Oma, led SST units in Guadeloupe and Poland.

The Smuckers plan to spend at least three months visiting children and grandchildren.

Yoder, a 1950 GC graduate, received a master's degree from Ohio State University and a doctoral degree from Purdue University. He joined the GC faculty in 1955 and founded the intercollegiate baseball program two years later.

Well spoken

If the Mennonite Church is to maintain its peace position, it will have to work to inculcate its beliefs in new members, sociologist Donald B. Kraybill said March 25. The Elizabethtown (Pa.) College professor of sociology spoke at GC on "The Social Fabric of Pacifism: A Comparative Analysis of Three Denominations" as part of the C. Henry Smith Peace Lectureship. . . . Richard J. Allfrey, a senior from London, England, took second place and Philip Stoltzfus, a senior from Harrisonburg, Va., took third place in the Indiana Intercollegiate Peace Speech contest March 23. Allfrey's speech was "Reconciliation in Northern Ireland" and Stoltzfus' was "Risking Peace."

Tapping the potential of Black students

By Lois Landis Kurowski

"To see ourselves as others see us is a most salutary gift. Hardly less important is the capacity to see others as they see themselves." —Aldous Huxley

Lee Roy Berry, Jr., is:
(a) an attorney
(b) a political scientist interested in Latin America
(c) a husband
(d) a father of three
(e) the only tenured Black member of the Goshen College faculty
(f) all of the above.

The correct answer, of course, is F, but the most obvious answer is E. Its obviousness does not make that classification less annoying to Berry, who, like every other human being, prefers to be viewed in three dimensions, not one.

As a 1966 graduate of Eastern Mennonite College and a member of the Goshen College faculty since 1969, he is well qualified to speak on the Black experience within the Mennonite Church and at Goshen College. However, part of the annoyance may spring from the time when being Black was not a qualification but a boundary that limited every aspect of a Black person's existence.

For instance, in the summer before he went to EMC, Berry got a job on a Florida road crew, an all-Black crew with a white "straw boss." He had been encouraged in both his spiritual and intellectual growth by Mervin and Melva Shirk, who had been sent by Lancaster Conference to work among Blacks in Florida.

While working along the side of a road one day, Berry saw Mrs. Mildred Yoder, a member of his congregation, drive by. He waved at her — and was summarily fired by the straw boss for waving at a white woman.

Berry made it through EMC with the encouragement and support of the Shirks, Mildred Yoder and Fern Miller, members of his congregation. In fact, although none of his family members attended his graduation, Mildred Yoder traveled from Florida to Virginia to do just that.

As Berry notes, none of those members of his congregation who helped him so much had attended college. Obviously their confidence in him was well placed, because he also has a master's and doctoral degrees in government and international studies from the University of Notre Dame and a J.D. degree from Indiana University. He now practices law during the day in Elkhart and teaches at GC in the evening.

In the 25 years since Berry started college, the United States has become a less overtly racist society. However, Berry believes, racism's legacy makes it difficult for young Black students from disadvantaged backgrounds to take full advantage of educational opportunities available to them.

Writing in The New Republic in 1985, two Black professionals defined that legacy of racism as "the strong negative stereotypes about Black intellectual capacity."

As Berry points out, although Blacks have been in North America for 368 years, only 130 years have passed since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that Dred Scott was not a citizen but a chattel, and only 124 years have passed since Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation. For more than 200 years in the U.S., Blacks and everything Black — intellects, culture and emotions — were legally considered sub-human.

"How can you expect people to get over that?" Berry said. "People don't cast off a legacy like you would change a coat."

Long after Blacks were nominally free, racism kept them emotionally shackled. Because of racism, educated Blacks did not advance in society as educated white people did. It was not unusual, in the first 50 years of this century, for Blacks with college degrees to work as sleeping-car porters on trains because those were the only jobs available to them.

Because they did not see educated Blacks advancing in society, Black people did not form the same attitudes toward the U.S. that European immigrants had, Berry said.

"The difference is that Europeans thought of America as a place where you can achieve," he said. Blacks knew, however, that because of the color of their skin, they would not be allowed to achieve. That reality created a whole set of attitudes within Black culture that still inhibits the educational achievement of young Blacks from low-income homes, Berry believes.

Other voices in the educational community support Berry's view.

Signithia Fordham, an anthropologist at the University of the District of Columbia, studied 33 Black students at a predominantly Black Washington, D.C., high school for a year. She found that students let their grades fall and decided not to take challenging courses because they were afraid their friends would accuse them of "acting white" if they studied a lot and got good grades.

The anthropologist said, "This problem arose partly because white Americans traditionally refused to acknowledge that Black Americans are capable of intellectual achievement and partly because Black Americans began to doubt their own intellectual ability, began to define academic success as white people's prerogative, and began to discourage their peers . . . from 'acting white.' "

This legacy means that Black students today need just as much emotional and academic support as he did 25 years ago, Berry said.

There already are institutions that give such support to Black students, he noted — traditionally Black colleges such as Grambling State University, Spelman College, Tougaloo College and Bethune-Cookman College.

"Black educators in the South intuitively knew what Black kids needed," Berry said. "One of the things Black colleges knew they had to do was help students make up for deficiencies. When you went to college, it was expected that you needed to take extra time with your studies. Those colleges are still doing it."

On the other hand, traditionally white colleges had a different idea of what a college was, Berry said. "A college is supposed to function so that it attracts the brightest students, fills them full of education and sends them out into the world. There is a minimal educational level expected."

At Goshen, two things complicate the situation further, he believes.

For white students at Mennonite high schools such as Christopher Dock and Bethany Christian, GC may well be their first-choice college because of its quality and Mennonite affiliation. Top students from those schools come to Goshen.

However, for Black and Hispanic students, GC probably isn't the college of first choice. Highly selective colleges, such as the Ivy League schools and Stanford, skim the cream of Black academic achievers, offering them scholarships and cosmopolitan atmosphere. Less academically prepared Black students who come to GC have as much potential as Christopher Dock or Bethany Christian grads but lack their preparation.

Many white faculty members have a hard time understanding what such Black students experience because the professors were always first in their classes and got a lot of support from their families for their academic efforts, Berry believes.

GC, like many small liberal-arts colleges, has conflicting ideals, he thinks. The "vision born out of Christian motivation to be brothers with all people and be sympathetic to the poor" conflicts with "an emphasis on quality education" and SAT scores, creating "considerable ambivalence among faculty members."

At the same time, Black students also feel "cross-pressures," he said. These pressures are part of the reason many minority students drop out of college.

The average adolescent is a "conformist socially," Berry notes, and wants little more than to fit in. Black students from disadvantaged backgrounds must be nonconformists within their own culture just to make it to college.

"They feel themselves pulled by their home environment. I felt it a lot, when I got frustrated," Berry said.

"People who come here from poor neighborhoods have done an awful lot of surviving just to get here," he said. "If given half a chance, they'll continue surviving."

An ideal program for Black students from disadvantaged backgrounds would begin with the expectation that they would take five or six years to finish, Berry thinks. He would start students with only one or two courses the first semester, so they could learn how to study and make up deficiencies in their preparation. Students also would need to have faculty mentors.

Berry recognizes that the students must make a commitment to themselves. "When I went to EMC, I was ready to commit myself. When I wrote my first English composition, it took me 14 hours to write a 500-word composition. I studied 72 hours once for a history test — and I got a B," he said.

"If I wasn't serious about it, it would all have gone to naught."

Sabbaticals, resignations alter 1987-88 faculty roster

Nine faculty members will take sabbaticals during the 1987-88 school year, and eight others have resigned.

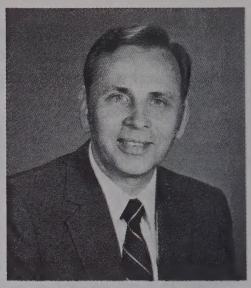
Those who have resigned include E. Douglas Bomberger, assistant professor of music; James A. Lapp, campus minister; Carol S. Murray, associate professor of English; Carol A. Paris, associate professor of computer science; Sharon Friesen Penner, assistant professor of home economics; Sanna L. Yoder, assistant director of information services, and Scot Yoder, assistant professor of philosophy.

Leaving the faculty as a result of consolidation are Marion R. Wenger, professor of German and assistant librarian in the Mennonite Historical Library, and Cheryl M. Martin, assistant professor of nursing. Catherine Mumaw, professor of home economics, resigned in December following the decison to drop the home economics major. Beth E. Weaver, instructor in nursing, has completed her two-year term as replacement for Evelyn J. Driver, associate professor of nursing, who has been on leave.

Those taking full-year sabbaticals include Robert M. Birkey, associate professor of social work; Marvin Blickenstaff, professor of music; Merritt P. Gardner, professor of mathematics; Mervin R. Helmuth, associate professor of nursing, and John D. Yordy, professor of chemistry.

John Oyer, professor of history, will be on a two-thirds sabbatical from January to June 1988.

Virginia Christophel, associate professor of nursing, will be on a leave of absence in 1987-88.



Beyond good intentions

By Victor Stoltzfus

". . . we all need to care about the future of the one in three of us [in the U.S.] who will be non-white by 2010." — Harold L. Hodgkinson, Senior Fellow, American Council on Education

When I read the alumni magazines of other colleges and universities, I admire the inclusion of candid articles that identify weaknesses as well as success stories. The only way to honestly interpret minority happenings in our nation, in American higher education and at Goshen College, is to report losses, not gains.

The losses take several forms.

— The Chronicle of Higher Education reports a disturbing increase in racist incidents on campus. The student radio station at a large midwestern university recently featured shameful racial slurs that were then reported in the student newspaper.

— Some of the historically Black colleges are in deep financial trouble. Several have lost their accreditation.

— Since 1980, undergraduate enrollment in the U.S. increased by 40 percent for Asians, 12 percent for Hispanics, 1 percent for American Indians and decreased 4 percent for Blacks.

— Federal aid for needy students has decreased in real dollars. Between 1978-79 and 1982-83, Pell Grants for the neediest students went up only 13 percent as the Consumer Price Index for those years was rising 57 percent. If you add the maximum Pell Grant to the maximum Guaranteed Student Loan, it met less than half the cost of attending a private college in 1982-83. (The increase in 1986-87 does not offset past losses.) Sister Kathleen A. Ross, president of Heritage College, Toppenish, Wash., summarizes the research on minority dropouts: "Virtually every study of . . . minority group drop-outs in colleges and universities has verified finances to be the number one problem."

Goshen College began this school year with 948 full time students. Minorities included 27 Blacks, 26 Hispanics, 2 American Indians, and 10 Asian and Pacific Islanders. We have fewer minority faculty and students than we had in the '70s when targeted federal scholarship funds were available for minorities. As I travel, I meet minority GC alumni who are making outstanding contributions in the Christian ministry, education, medicine, business and other professions. They frequently urge their own children to attend Goshen College.

Several months ago, I met with the GC Black Student Union to hear their suggestions about how to make Goshen a better place to live and study. They want us to recruit more Black students and faculty. They want a firm administrative policy against racist behavior. They give the faculty high marks for sensitivity but report several hurtful incidents with fellow students. They want the college to speak out forcefully against discrimination in housing in our city. They want the Black experience to be reflected in courses and special events. They want to be reassured that we sincerely want them to be here. Far more than in any campus on which I have taught or studied, there is genuine cooperation between African nationals and American Blacks.

President Ross reminds independent colleges of our own heritage in helping "outsiders." We came into being as a bridge into the mainstream of society for earlier generations of German, Polish, Irish and other immigrants. GC alumni like myself who come from a Germanic background and are 50 years of age and older surely remember when we were not a part of American and Canadian professional life and the special nurture our kind of folks received at Goshen College. In the greater social and economic security that this generation enjoys, President Ross asks, will we "abandon that historic role (of a major socializing force)?" Harold Hodgkinson believes that independent colleges will be more stable and viable than the weaker state schools in the future. "The major issue is . . . not survival but . . . the ability to thrive on diversity."

Church colleges, in particular, should serve as enlightening examples of how diversity enriches community. To strengthen Goshen College's example, we have set a goal in our strategic plan of increasing minority student enrollment. We already have received several alumni gifts targeted for minority student aid that will help us toward that goal. (More money, however, is needed.)

But just as important as more money are changes in attitude. Reaching the goal of a community that celebrates racial diversity means first asking ourselves what changes will make this campus a more hospitable environment for minority students. We have heard evidence from Black students that our campus reflects too much of the racism of our culture, and we are determined to address that fact.

The civil rights era of advancement in the narrow legal sense is over. But the inclusion of many more minority members into the educational, social and religious institutions that provide for full human development will require sensitivity and determination for decades to come.

Student creative ARTS

About this issue

During the year, Goshen College students have many opportunties to demonstrate their artistic, musical or dramatic abilty for the Goshen community. They give recitals, perform in musical groups and plays or display their work in exhibits on campus.

We take this opportunity through the Bulletin to publish some of their poetry and art from the past year for the larger GC family.

Student dramatic and musical talent is less easily published. To experience it, you will need to come to campus for a concert or play, or attend a performance of music and drama groups when they are on tour.

We hope you will take the opportunity to visit campus during Alumni Weekend, Oct. 2-4, as well as other times when you are in northern Indiana.

Lord — How I Hate Detasseling

Raindrops
fall on a speeding pane of glass, while long, white streaks flash by my roadset eyes as we roll across the flatlands of Illinois.

The land
sprawls endlessly
yellow right and left of the road except for corn-stubbled black squares where bruised mother earth's dark blood rises to the surface.

Farms
dot the landscape;
solitary little clumps of buildings huddle together whispering rumours about rival protrusions just down the lane as a sad and lonely windmill keeps its slow-circling vigil, the only barrier offering any semblance of resistance to a pale, grey-blue sky, intermittently tinged with streaks of faded gold as it bears down on the distant horizon, more dominating than a sky out west or east.

The road stretches on and on and you realize just how big the country is — how small you are. Gradually, night creeps up behind you and snuffs the light.

Cave Painting

They sit in white nylon mesh halos, in white buttoned nooses,
in mutual attraction on hard wooden benches nodding in sleepy-eyed sanction to what soap-shiny brother is saying up front this week and last and the last. Like cornfields and well-ordered meetinghouse heads, repetition is safe and, above all, fruitful
(My brethren, let not the paint from the walls of cities so damned and more touch your hearts' ramparts).

What's missing is helmets and synchronized marches, rifles on shoulders. Not much else is lacking from these peaceful faces.
Four hundred years of violent oppression
(a day, for all that's changed) and my people still huddle in caves, hunted by shoe-fly pie haunchos
— the salt of te earth — who counted with God and found not one righteous in our decadent Münster.

We dare not emerge from our catacomb grottos.
By the flickering light of an uncertain fire we paint on the walls of our cave souls our inside-out, upside-down story.

Fire-eater

Rules erode under my grip like brass flattened on the anvil
I slice fire and with parched palms return to drink cool fluid my grandmother raised from the well, my mother wove into beverage its slosh covers my sobs refilled, I cut the wick the burning source three rock-ribbed flickers then flame bows to smoke

Faith

I.

I still see in my mind
  The tall, grand figure of a man
Whose horn-rimmed glasses lined
  The stern, scowling face to Shroud a passionate heart.

He built a cathedral to God
  In South India and pulled a strong
Following to worship on Sundays,
  While my brother and I gazed
In wonder at its cavernous ceilings
  And explored the labyrinth of doors.
The Sabbath was holy, but mystifying.

II.

My father's rebellious youth spent,
  He donned the divine mantle and Sailed to Thailand.
  An answer to prayer, they said.
Travelling zealously, he converted hundreds,
  Even Buddhist monks in ancient temples
Erected to a strange golden God.

The man could preach.
  His commanding voice laced with true conviction
Comforted many, while I shuddered,
  The sabbath was a fearful mystery.

"Will you be a preacher someday?"
  He once ventured.
I smiled, but didn't reply.

III.

Now the mystery rages in my soul,
  And holy places do not always
Have incense, chants and myrrh.

To Walk the Tracks

The railroad tracks lead north or south,
Forever into gathering blue
Atmosphere as thick as dusk,
The blue of distances.

Brush trails along the tracks,
Wild grass, thin tree company,
Meeting the back ends of lawns.

There are many ways to walk the tracks:
There are the ties. Skipping from one
Chocolate sunken post to the next
Forces rhythm into the stride.

There are rails. Slippery steel threads
Of beam challenge balance:
Rail walk is an arms-up, head-down walk.

Blunt stones bank the side,
Only tough shoes cover their jab.
The sharp chips smooth to pebbles,

There's the dusty path, between rails
And weeds, shadows and sun, skirting puddles.
The path's an easy amble.

On a March day seduced of chill by a bright sun,
I walked where we once walked;
I though I was walking west, not south.
I thought of you.

In my own way I walked the tracks,
Unrhythmically, unbalanced, unprotected.
I skirted the puddles along a dusty path
As if to cut the distances between us.

GC board acts on dance policy

After a trial period this year, a policy permitting on-campus dances by campus organizations received unanimous approval from the GC Board of Overseers meeting on campus June 1 and 2. The reaction of students and parents to dances on campus has been largely positive according to President Victor Stoltzfus.

Speaking for the board, Nelson Kraybill, pastor of the Taftsville (Vt.) Chapel, said, "Administrators and students have fulfilled expectations of the board of overseers for supervision of on-campus dances and selection of appropriate music." However, "dancing should be only a small part of a total recreational program," he added.

Responding to the national concern about AIDS, the board adopted a policy for dealing with potential cases on campus. Drawn up by campus physician Dr. Willard Krabill in consultation with the Campus Health and Wholeness Committee, the policy adopts an educational approach to AIDS. It notes that prevention "is the only effective weapon against AIDS" and that prevention "is best assured by adherence to the personal lifestyle which Goshen College has always promoted and affirmed."

In other actions, the board granted tenure to Victor Koop, associate professor of psychology and conferred emeritus status on Albert J. Albrecht, Mary E. Bender, Mary K. Nafziger, Jay Harold Yoder, Arthur A. Smucker and Mary K. Oyer.

Bible Society honors student

Philip A. Thomas, a senior at Goshen College, is the 1987 Goshen College recipient of the American Bible Society National Scholarly Achievement award for excellence in biblical studies.

A Bible and religion major, he is the son of Paul and Lou Thomas, Goshen, Ind.

The American Bible Society honors top students annually from colleges and seminaries across the United States for achievement in the study of the Bible. Thomas received a "Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia" Old Testament in Hebrew with an English-language introduction and key card. He studied Hebrew at Hesston (Kan.) College with Prof. Ron Guengerich.

"Philip is an exceptional student, with a very sharp analytical mind," Prof. Don Blosser, chair of the Bible, religion and philosophy department, said. "He has been a fine example of leadership both in the classroom and in religious activities on campus. We are very pleased to have him recognized in this way."

A 1983 graduate of Concord High School, Thomas plans to attend graduate school to prepare for teaching in a college or seminary.

Spring sports finish seasons

Goshen College's golfers had a strong season, finishing second in the Mid-Central Conference (MCC) and fourth in the NAIA District 21 Tourney. The team turned in its best performance at the Goshen Invitational, setting a new record of 308 for the tourney. The Maple Leafs also won the Grace and Huntington invitationals. Freshman Brad Kaufmann, Middlebury, Ind., was named to the All-MCC team with a conference average of 80.75 strokes per round, and to the All-District 21 team with a score of 157 for the district tournament.

Three GC athletes represented the school at the NAIA national track meet May 21-23. Senior Fred Kem, Knox, Ind., was 11th in his heat in the 3,000-meter steeplechase. Kem was MCC conference champion in the event and was selected for the All-MCC Track Team for the third year, ending an outstanding career in track and cross-country at GC.

Also at the national meet were freshman Donna Porter, who ran in the 100- and 200-meter dashes, and junior Becky Yoder who competed in the high jump. Porter, of Elkhart, Ind., set new District 21 and Hoosier Conference for Women records in the 100-meter dash (12.85 seconds) and an HCW record in the 200 (26.9 seconds). Yoder, from Goshen, tied the HCW record in the high jump (5 feet, 2 inches).

Named to the All-MCC Track team were sophomore Randy Hertzler, Goshen, for a 21-foot 10-inch long jump, and senior Joe Lehman, Elkhart, for a 40-foot 10-1/2-inch shotput.

Baseball was severely affected by SST this spring, Coach J. Harold Yoder's final season. Eight players either were on SST when the season started or left for SST at the season's mid-point. The Leafs ended with a 1-20 record.

In the last issue of the Bulletin Jeevan Paul of India should have been listed as the new member of the Student Central Committee, rather than Vishal Varma.

Faculty appointments announced

Three full-time faculty members and six part-time faculty members will join the faculty during the 1987-88 school year.

The full-time faculty members are Jeffry W. Birky, who will be assistant professor of physical education and basketball coach; Conley K. McMullen, who will be assistant professor of biology, and John D. Roth, who will be assistant professor of history and religion.

A 1979 Goshen College graduate, Birky also graduated from GC in 1982 with a second B.A. in physical education. He also is a 1977 graduate of Hesston College and is a native of Hesston.

Since 1979, Birky has worked at Hesston College, where he was an assistant coach for baseball, soccer and basketball and women's basketball coach. He is working on a master's degree in sports administration at Wichita State University.

Roth, who previously taught at GC in the 1985-86 school year, will return from Mainz, Germany, to teach in the history department and the Bible, religion and philosophy department in January, 1988. A native of Killbuck, Ohio, Roth has been doing research in Mainz for his dissertation on popular Protestant religious culture in the Palatinate of Germany and the emergence of a politically articulate religious community in the period 1750-1850.

Roth is a 1981 Goshen College graduate and received a master's degree from the University of Chicago in 1983. He has been studying for his doctoral degree at the University of Chicago.

She is a 1949 graduate of Indiana University and received a master's degree from the University of Notre Dame and a master's degree in social work from Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis in 1977.

Hollinger, an Elkhart native, is a 1972 graduate of Goshen College and received a master's degree from Montclair (N.J.) State College. She also received a master's degree from Columbia University in 1979 and a doctoral degree from Columbia in 1983. Hollinger has studied at the Trinity Divinity School, Deerfield, Ill., and comes to GC from the Alliance Theological Seminary in Nyack-on-Hudson, N.Y., where she has been an adjunct assistant professor in counseling.

A 1979 graduate of Eastern Mennonite College, Lapp studied at GC 1965-66 and at Sauk Valley Junior College, Dixon, Ill., where she received an associate's degree. She received a master's degree in 1982 from James Madison University and has taught since 1983 at Spotswood Elementary School, Harrisonburg.

Besides teaching education courses, Lapp will be coordinator/teacher at the Oaklawn Academy, part of the new Oaklawn Hospital in Goshen.

GC volunteers involved in Special Olympics

The International Summer Special Olympics will be one of the biggest events of the summer in Northern Indiana. The games, slated to run July 31 through Aug. 8 at the University of Notre Dame, South Bend, are expected to attract 4,500 mentally retarded athletes from around the world.

The efforts of 15,000 volunteers will be essential for the success of the games. Among those thousands of volunteers will be several who are faculty, staff, students or alumni of Goshen College.

Dwain Hartzler, men's athletic director and assistant professor of physical education, has the most responsibility of any GC volunteer. He is the venue manager for the soccer competition. Hartzler has been working since February, 1986, on finding and organizing the volunteers necessary for the entire soccer program. One of the first things he did was recruit Marilyn Graber, associate director of admissions, to be the assistant venue manager for soccer.

Don Ogle, Goshen College director of sports medicine, will be the medical coordinator, supervising five trainers.

Others helping out with the soccer activities are Murray Hartzler '80, field managing; Sherri Gunden King '79, in charge of opening ceremonies; Geoff Landis '76, head official; Mike Peachey '86, field managing; Dale Stoltzfus '84, field managing; Jay Troyer '76, equipment manager; June Alliman Yoder '67, announcer at the opening ceremonies; Ben Yoder, sophomore, coordinating scorekeepers, and Karen Krabill-Yoder '84 and Scot Yoder '83, in charge of volunteers.

Hartzler believes there will be even more GC alumni and friends involved, but a complete list of volunteers was not yet available. The soccer competition will involve 40 teams from 23 foreign countries and 19 states with a total of 566 players. One of the challenges the soccer volunteers face is giving skills tests to all the players Aug. 1 to determine the match-ups for the tournament, which begins the next day.

Hartzler anticipates teams and players with skills at all levels. The countries represented will include nine Latin American countries, three Caribbean countries, four Asian countries (including the People's Republic of China), four European countries, and Canada, Australia and Kenya.

A highlight of the soccer competition will be a special all-star game Aug. 6 featuring a pre-game clinic by Pele, the Brazilian player considered to be the best soccer player ever.

The volunteers probably won't have time to be dazzled by stars, however: they have a tight schedule of 12-hour days for the week of the games.

Despite their fatigue, it seems likely that on Aug. 9, as they finally get some rest, they'll agree that the International Special Olympics was "an athletic event where everyone wins."

Stoltzfus named to second term

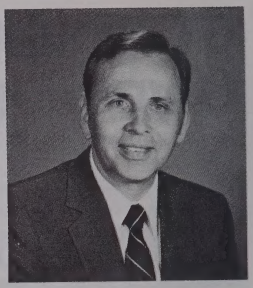
The Mennonite Board of Education has named Victor Stoltzfus to a second term as president of Goshen College.

The appointment, which began July 1, 1987, came on recommendation of the Goshen College Board of Overseers, following a review by a three-person committee of the overseers.

"Victor has provided strong leadership to Goshen College for these past three years," noted the review committee in its report. "His leadership gifts are recognized by many both on and off campus, and with his leadership the college has made significant progress in addressing issues of major importance to the institution."

"We recognize that the current environment makes the private college presidency a very difficult task," the report concluded. "We commend Victor for his strategic, enthusiastic and positive leadership."

The overseers' review committee comprised Robert Shreiner, pastor, Blooming Glen (Pa.) Mennonite Church, chair; Leanne Schertz, professor of English, Illinois Central College, Peoria, Ill., and Aden Yoder, pastor, Shore Mennonite Church, Shipshewana, Ind.



Artists transform the ordinary

By Victor Stoltzfus

"My first reaction was the ordinariness of each day."
—Goshen alumna on adjusting to her first job.

Creative artists unlock the door of the ordinary. They beckon and we follow into a more vivid, expressive life. Professor Calvin Seerveld, philosopher at the Institute for Christian Studies in Toronto, writes, "while not everyone has the God-given talent to paint pictures or write books, we are all capable of leading aesthetically aware lives. . . . It is not frivolous or unspiritual but being alive in God's world."

The negativism and fear of artistic expression in earlier Mennonite history was borrowed from the Calvinist wing of the Reformation. Maturing through time, they have repented of that error and so must we. The entire religious community is enriched when artists feel aesthetic and religious appreciation for their work.

We nourish aesthetic awareness because of who we are. Unless we have amputated our own humanity, the desire to create and respond to beauty is deep within our spirit. St. Ignatius has written, "the glory of God is a human alive in all (their) human powers."

The arts restore what stress and ugliness erode from the human spirit. Artistic delight and meaning need no further justification. And it is a happy side benefit that nourishing the inner life reflects itself in the quality of our outer lives. Most work settings are no longer arenas of physical prowess so much as they are interpersonal and emotional challenges to our vital balance.

We nourish aesthetic awareness because of who God is. Worship is awe in relation to Divine beauty as well as Divine duty. The psalmist prayed to "gaze upon the beauty of the Lord . . ." (27:4) and closed the psalter in the last five psalms with a call to "praise the Lord with everything you've got — the timbrel, dance, music, poetry, the works — the arts." (Seerveld)

At the center of our campus is the peace sculpture, "Broken Shield," by alumnus John Mishler. It envisions a time when all people enjoy such a secure peace that shields can safely be discarded, even broken. Each of us, through imagination, can ponder a variety of threats to human security and many kinds of shields. From outer space to inner space, we long for peace. Our visual symbol helps to keep the peace ideal alive in imagination during a violent era.

Just as the artist leads us out of the confinement of ordinary experience, sometimes we need to escape the limits of language. Cheryl Nafziger, GC student from Ontario, expressed this thought in the program of her senior communication recital. "There comes a point where the word can no longer indicate truths which one innately knows or experiences. . . . The truth of deep pain often, not only hurts too much to put into words, but any words found simply prove inadequate to reveal the depth of feeling. One must turn elsewhere in order to find access to these truths. Eventually one must turn to symbols, to images, to art."

Before moving to Goshen in 1981, Marie and I attended the GC baccalaureate service. The sound of 1,200 people singing in four parts after 11 years away from that musical tradition of our heritage was incredibly beautiful. And then unexpectedly, our guest from China joined in the last verse of a hymn remembered from her Baptist childhood. It was an extraordinary moment. Her Christmas cards from Xian, China, still mention "the Goshen spirit."

The glory of the liberal arts is realized in their relations among each other. All knowledge is richer for the artistic sight and sound that expresses the extraordinary within the ordinary.

A LEADERSHIP COLLEGE

Report of the President

"Colleges, particularly church-related ones, have the potential for leadership in education and in the nation precisely because the qualities and skills that characterize these institutions at their best are the ones most needed now." —William Bryan Martin, The Carnegie Foundation

By Victor Stoltzfus

This past June I was invited by Kenneth Briggs, former religion editor of The New York Times, to meet with him — along with college presidents from the Moravian and Quaker traditions — to share what is happening at Goshen College. Briggs believes colleges like Goshen are "the wave of the future" because we have kept alive the liberal-arts ideal of free inquiry that is rooted in a faith tradition.

I share the conviction of these supporters: Goshen College has a special mission to serve a needy nation and world. The scandalous breakdowns in other institutions that made national news in 1987 only highlight the need for coherent colleges with moral foundations.

Gains and losses

We continue the struggle to become a stronger, more unified college. Fall trimester was a bittersweet time for our campus. The consolidation effort, which was needed to scale back our program to a size we could sustain, required hard choices. Loss and grief are unavoidable human reactions to the termination of programs and the separation from close faculty friends that resulted from early retirements.

Fall trimester was also a time of gratitude for an enrollment gain of 50 percent in the freshman class and about 10 percent overall. Students, faculty and administration discovered that we could work together to manage enrollment, rather than passively play victim to adverse economic and demographic trends. Rich Gerig's admissions staff deserves special recognition for their efforts in the enrollment turnaround.

Educational review begins

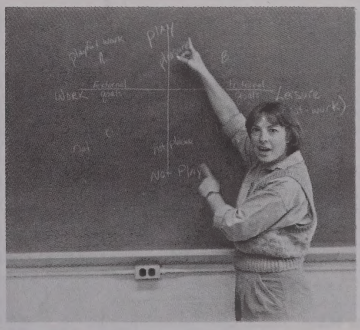
Starting in January, the faculty — under the leadership of Academic Dean Willard Martin and Dan Hess, acting chair of the program review committee — began a review of the total educational program as called for in our Strategic Plan.

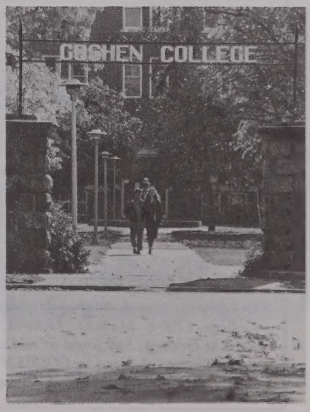
Between January and June, weekly faculty meetings considered a number of new programs and policies developed by a faculty steering committee and subcommittees.

— We adopted a modified-semester calendar (with a May term) beginning in the 1988-89 school year.

— We examined and affirmed the purposes of international education.

— We debated the student-activities fees and student pay.





— And, in the most far-reaching decision, we adopted 10 learning outcomes — what we expect Goshen graduates to become — that are closely tied to the mission statement of the college.

Among the desired outcomes are those that address the student's ability to communicate clearly and think critically, to develop leadership skills, a sense of vocation and a personal faith.

The implications of making these outcomes our educational goals will be the subject of much discussion among the faculty during the coming year.

National trends in education

The higher education environment in our nation last year was a mixture of favorable and unfavorable news. Congress again rejected administration recommendations for deep budget cuts in student aid and is currently proposing a gain that will offset inflation. The Supreme Court in the "Amos" case was decisive in protecting the right of religious colleges to favor religiously committed faculty and staff in hiring.

On the negative side, we still must cope with the large shift in federal support from grants to loans since 1980. Sharply rising student-debt levels are a concern to all of us.

Goshen College has held tuition to $5,250 for early depositers in 1987, compared to the average cost of $6,150 for private colleges in 1986. We have increased our own student aid budget from $485,695 in 1982-83 to $1,156,332 in 1986-87. Goshen College, in cooperation with other Mennonite colleges, is also researching the possibility of pre-paid tuition along the lines of the Duquesne University (Pittsburgh, Pa.) plan.

"In the most far-reaching decision, we adopted 10 learning outcomes — what we expect Goshen graduates to become — that are closely tied to the brief mission statement of the college."

National recognition continues

Since the cost of higher education relates to value, it was gratifying to continue to receive national recognition for the quality of our programs. Ernest Boyer's College, a research study of American higher education by the Carnegie Foundation, cites Goshen's international education program. The Consortium for the Advancement of Higher Education, Washington, D.C., nominated Goshen for a Dana Foundation award.

The Pew Trusts of Philadelphia invited Goshen College to apply for a large grant to finance additional research and teaching opportunities for science students and faculty. Pew's invitation was to only four colleges in Indiana and 60 colleges nationwide, in combination with a smaller number of research universities. Our video, produced to tell prospective students and their parents the GC story, was a gold-medal winner in the Council for Advancement and Support of Education's Recognition Program.

GC and the Mennonite Church

The Mennonite Church continues to be the primary source of our student body. The past year saw a number of advances in building good relationships. The new Conference Advisory Board met for the first time, chaired by Bill Breckbill, Indiana-Michigan Conference Minister. College people were invited frequently to serve as speakers in congregations, conferences and in the denominational Assembly at Purdue University.

Congregational and conference student aid plans grew in number and generosity. It is possible their contribution to students at Goshen this year will total half-a-million dollars.

The Mennonite Board of Education produced a promotional videotape on church colleges directed to parents that was mailed to every Mennonite pastor.

Recent studies of the impact of Mennonite education upon church membership are striking. Charles Gautsche, president of the Mennonite Board of Education, cited three studies with a sample of 2,083 youth in his report to the Mennonite Assembly at Purdue. Of those who attended Mennonite colleges, from three regions of the church, 81 percent are active in Mennonite Churches; of those who attended other schools, 54 percent are active in Mennonite Churches; and of those who did not go to college, 55 percent are active among the Mennonites.

We are also aiming to increase minority student enrollment from seven percent to at least eight percent. Even this modest goal will mean reversing the national trend toward lower minority enrollments. As noted in the May Goshen College Bulletin, the college must address a number of weaknesses in campus climate for minority students. A faculty-student committee, chaired by Professor Robert Birkey made a campus-wide study and report to the president. Among the recommendations we are implementing this year is hiring the part-time services of Elizabeth Soto to provide advocacy and advising for minority students.

"We are grateful to all our supporting constituencies for the highest level of giving ever for both current operations and designated gifts."

GC and Elkhart County

We are grateful for strong ties in our county. Approximately one-third of our total contributed funds this past year came from alumni, other friends and businesses in Elkhart County. We were especially gratified that we enrolled 60 Elkhart County freshman last fall, compared to 35 the previous year. Our total enrollment remains about one-third Indiana students.

New programs and facilities

The faculty adopted several new or revised academic programs last year. A new department of collegiate studies gives special advising, testing and faculty support to students who come to campus undecided about a major. These students are now called the "deciders" and have a departmental home. We adopted a new athletic-training minor. With the loss of the home-economics major, we revised the foods and nutrition major, strengthening the dietetic track. The art department has added new coursework and internships in graphic design.

Under the direction of Business Manager William Zuercher, the college continued to make improvements in the physical plant. The Board approved a new roof and windows for Science Hall. In the short run this will provide energy savings and aesthetic improvements for the Natural Sciences Division and an improved building for other academic needs when new facilities become available for science. The admissions department has moved to new offices in the first floor of the Arts Building. This move, in turn, releases more space for the Student Development Division. The Visual Arts Building is gaining more space for sculpture. The new marine biology facility in the Florida Keys was used for the first time in our special summer programming for high school students.

The Board of Overseers has defined facilities for science and recreation-fitness as the two highest priorities in campus master planning for future space needs. Proposals to major foundations and individual solicitations are in process.

Looking toward the college's 100th birthday in 1994, we have developed a total resource development campaign that will enable us to enter our second century with spiritual, academic and financial vitality. Faculty contributed many hours of self-study to determine the requirements for strong programs. Pilot presentations of Uncommon Cause—Century II have begun with the expectation of carrying this message to many of our friends in the next few years.

We are pleased to report that for the 48th consecutive year revenue from all sources equaled the expenses of operating the college. However, achieving a balanced budget required the use of $40,000 of special-gift income. The Goshen College Board of Overseers has asked us to work at the goal of balanced operating budgets with no extraordinary income. We missed that goal this year but take satisfaction in reducing our reliance on such funds from $270,000 last year to $40,000 this year.

College Relations Director Ron Gunden joins me in thanking you for the highest level of giving ever for current operations. We believe you share our purpose — to offer gifted youth an environment for rapid growth as followers and servant leaders.

Donors invest $3.29 million in Goshen College

By Ron Gunden

North Americans are bombarded each day with investment opportunities — in stocks, bonds, real estate, mutual funds and certificates of deposit, to name a few. Daily reports of a record-high stock market are an indication that investors are responding to those opportunities. And given the uncertainties of our economy, who can argue with the wisdom of setting aside current income for the future benefits of a "rainy-day" or retirement fund.

In a similar way Goshen College supporters are investing in the future. Your gifts help provide quality educational programs for young persons who will work and serve in our churches, communities, country and world for years to come.

The following pages name the thousands of individuals, corporations and organizations who have invested in Goshen College and our students in the past year. We proudly list them for your review.

Within these totals, the following items are of special interest:

- Total contributions increased 17 percent.
- Alumni giving to the Goshen College Fund increased 4.1 percent.
- 33.2 percent of all alumni contributed, an increase of one percent.
- A record number of alumni — 5,953 — contributed $1.493 million this year, an increase of 32 percent.
- Business and industry contributions to the Goshen College Fund increased 10.3 percent.
- Goshen College Associates, representing 323 households, contributed $1.682 million.
- A record number of parent households — 426 — contributed $94,215.
- Goshen College faculty and staff contributed $139,075 — an increase of 21.7 percent.
- More than $600,000 was added to the endowment fund.
- Thirty-one life-income plans were written, totaling $725,207
- Contributions to Uncommon Cause Century II totaled $2.922 million.

Thank you for your investment in Goshen College — an investment in the future.

Ron Gunden is director of college relations.

Elkhart-GC relationship flourishes

Elkhart County and Goshen College have had a mutually beneficial relationship for nearly 100 years. Just as the college has enriched the personal and business lives of county citizens through educational, cultural and public affairs programs, so the county has offered a stable economy, job opportunities and supportive friends.

Many Goshen College alumni have chosen to live in Elkhart County; at present, 4,140 alumni reside here. They, along with many friends who are not alumni, send students and contribute financial support to GC.

The figures below show the excellent support the community gave the college in 1986-87.

Nursing scholarships established

A new nursing student scholarship fund will enable young women and men to keep alive the memory of the La Junta (Colo.) Mennonite School of Nursing and the school's tradition of service.

Established by La Junta alumnae in early 1987, the scholarship is intended to support students in the nursing programs at Goshen, Hesston, and Eastern Mennonite colleges.

The Mennonite Board of Education is administering the Scholarship Fund. Contributions may be sent to the Board clearly designated for the Fund.

Lehman clan boasts 24 GC alumni

Twenty-four members of the late Samuel and Clara Kennel Lehman family (Castorland, N.Y.) have more than a family connection: all 24 have attended Goshen College. The 24 alumni posed for a picture recently while attending a family reunion at Camp Amigo, Sturgis, Mich.

Although Samuel and Clara Lehman never went to college, they instilled a thirst for knowledge in their children and were particularly supportive of GC. Of their 12 children, 10 attended GC, from 1941 to 1960. Two of their spouses are also GC graduates. Twelve grandchildren have carried on the GC tradition, including Maria Lehman, a GC sophomore.

*Class agents have been appointed for 17 Goshen College graduating classes. These volunteers are contacting their classmates on behalf of the Goshen College Fund. We appreciate the efforts of these uncommonly loyal alumni and take this opportunity to publicly express our appreciation. The class agent program has recently been reinstated, so not all classes have had agents named at the present.

Class support for Goshen College Fund

The following classes led the way in support of the Goshen College Fund.

Percentage of giving
1932	53.4%
1930	47.4%
1927	46.2%
1949	43.5%
1923	42.9%

Dollars to Goshen College Fund
1931	$24,835.00
1953	$18,830.25
1969	$17,920.50
1961	$17,342.00
1966	$16,807.50

The average gift to the Goshen College Fund was $139.

How do GC alumni compare to other private colleges?

The average alumni gift to Goshen College for undesignated, general-operating purposes was $139 in 1986-87. More than 33 percent of alumni gave in this category. The average gift designated by alumni for various scholarships, endowments and other restricted funds was $674.

The Council for Aid to Education, in a survey of U.S. four-year colleges and universities, reported the average alumni gift to four-year private schools for current operations is $157. That figure is about half the value of the average alumni gift for all purposes, which includes contributions to capital campaigns. Nationally, about 30 percent of private, four-year college alumni give to their alma maters.

Student leaders begin work

Leaders for student organizations began planning for the 1987-88 school year this month.

Chairing the Campus Activities Council is Steve Gale, a senior mathematics major from Tiskilwa, Ill. Committee members are Dinny Li, also a senior math major, from Hong Kong; Jennifer North, a sophomore elementary education major from Lombard, Ill.; and Gregory Stauffer, a sophomore collegiate studies major from Goshen, Ind.

Rebecca Conrad, a senior art major from New Carlisle, Ohio, will be editor of the Maple Leaf yearbook.

Bruce Hostetler, a senior communication major from Goshen, Ind., will be station manager of WGCS. His staff includes chief announcer Marta Brunner, a senior English major, also of Goshen, Ind.; production manager Mel Glick, a senior communication major from Shipshewana, Ind.; and program director Dave North, a senior communication major from Lombard, Ill.

Linda Blades of Belize will chair the International Students Club. Other members of the club leadership include Sonny Mandagie, a junior Bible and religion major from Central Java, Indonesia; Abril Rivera, a senior biology major from San Pedro, Honduras; and Vishal Varma, a junior business major from Calcutta, India.

The Black Student Union will be headed by Palesa Makhale, a senior psychology major from Soweto, South Africa. Other members of the BSU leadership are Lydia Julias, a freshman nursing major from Johannesburg, South Africa; Bhekumusa Msibi, a junior biology major from Swaziland; and Ian Walker, a sociology major from Cleveland, Ohio.

Officers for the Student Central Committee and the editors of the Record (announced in the May Bulletin) are (for SCC) Linda Blades, Belize City, Belize; Mark Krisetya, Indonesia; Dan Liechty, Goshen, Ind; John Vandenberg, Saskatoon, Sask.; Jeevan Paul, Jabalpur, India; and Dan Wenger, Lancaster, Pa. Record editors for fall and winter trimesters are Jonathan Shenk, Mountville, Pa., and Ellah Wakatama, Harare, Zimbabwe.

Guadeloupe students learn about America

Goshen College students frequently travel to Central America to learn about another culture during their Study-Service Trimesters; occasionally, students from Central America reverse the process and come to Goshen to learn about American culture.

That was the case this August when the college hosted 17 junior-high and high-school students from Guadeloupe, a small island in the French West Indies where GC currently has an SST unit. The students, ranging in age from 12 to 16, stayed with Goshen families in much the same way that GC students stay with families in host-SST countries.

Robert Romney, English teacher and organizer of the trip, said that the purpose of the visit was to "meet as many people as possible and learn something of the American way of life."

This "unofficial exchange" was arranged by Romney with the help of international education officials. Plans for the trip began as early as February when Romney approached Tom Meyers, Goshen College professor and leader of the SST unit in Guadeloupe. Romney expressed interest in bringing a small group of students to visit Goshen.

"I wanted to do something original," said Romney. "You can find groups that will bring students here, but they only take the young people to Disney World. The emphasis is on amusement." Romney, who is also an instructor in pedagogy and helps train English teachers, stressed that a visit to a place like Goshen would give the students a more realistic idea of American life.

Romney said that he hoped the people they met would urge them to practice their English. Many of the young people have studied English for up to five years and are able to communicate well. This opportunity will allow them to test their English. "There is a big difference between what you learn in a classroom and when you are in the country," said Romney.

During their stay the students visited local government offices, cheese and recreational vehicle factories, Heritage Middle School and the Shipshewana flea market. An excursion to South Bend took them to the post office, Notre Dame University and University Park Mall. These activities were arranged by Ruth Gunden, interim director of international education.

New windows for an old building

A summer "face-lift" has given the Science Building its first change of windows since construction was completed in 1916.

This renovation is part of a plan for improving the building that will also include refurbishing the roof. Although the college continues to plan for the construction of a new science building, the present offices and classrooms will remain in use after the new facility is complete.

The new windows will not only look better than their 72-year-old predecessors, but they will also improve the building's energy efficiency. These renovations will make the science hall a more comfortable place to work in, as well as ultimately save money.

The work was funded by a gift from alumni Harold and Thelma Schrock.

Stoltzfus wins speech contest

Philip E. Stoltzfus, an August, 1987, graduate of Goshen College, received the first-place award in the 1987 C. Henry Smith Peace Oratorical Contest.

Stoltzfus won the 1987 Goshen College peace speech contest and placed third in the state contest with his speech, "Risking Peace." He received a $250 prize for winning the C. Henry Smith Peace Oratorical Contest.

The contest is sponsored nationally by the Mennonite Central Committee. Entries are submitted on tape cassette. The judges were Bill Keeney, Kent, Ohio, Carl Laws Landis, Lancaster, Pa., and Lou Murray, Waterloo, Ontario.

The son of Ed and Mildred Stoltzfus, Harrisonburg, Va., Stoltzfus has majored in history and music at GC.

Students receive new phones

This summer a new telephone system, providing students with phones in their dormitory rooms, personal telephone numbers and the opportunity for long distance dialing, has been installed at GC.

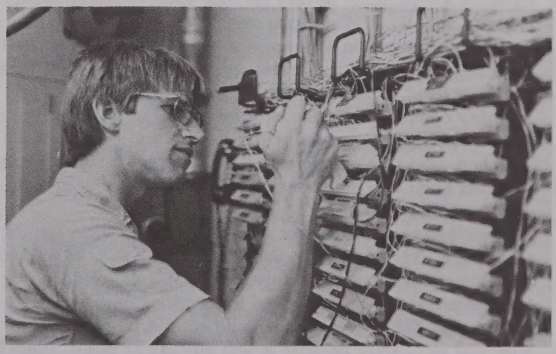
Norm Kauffmann, dean of student development, and Larry Rupp, director of residence life, have dreamed about a new phone system for several years. "We knew that parents and students had a variety of problems with the old system," Rupp said.

For students that system consisted of a campus switchboard that received the calls and then transferred them to a phone located in the hallway of a dormitory.

But the common phone-in-the-hall had problems. Students had little privacy to make and receive calls and phones were often busy because there were only two phones for every 15 students. Students living near the phone were frequently disturbed by phones ringing in the hallway. "Often it took a long time for someone to answer the phone," Rupp said. And long-distance calls were only possible from two pay phones in each dorm.

Parents also had problems placing long-distance calls to students. The switchboard would take the call and transfer it to the dorm floor. Then someone would look for the called student, who frequently was not in. All the while parents were being billed for the call. "Parents wasted a lot of calls and money like that," Rupp said.

The new phones should be a major improvement for everyone concerned. "We see personal phones as meeting the needs of students (and parents) for more private, dependable and convenient communication," said Kauffmann. "We believe that students will really appreciate this addition to dorm life that they are so used to at home."



Glenn Gilbert, GC electronics technician, along with a staff of student assistants, was responsible for the installation of the new telephone system and for programming the computer that will monitor the calls and telephone services. The new system is an updated version of the ROLM system GC has been using.

GC helps in cultural transition

When the Nisco Rubber Company of Japan transferred 10 families from Hiroshima, Japan, to Goshen, Ind., in July, Goshen College's program in teaching English to speakers of other languages (TESOL) helped smooth their transition from one culture to another.

Nisco finalized a contract with the college in April for English-language instruction and community orientation. Rosemary Wyse, assistant professor of English, and her staff introduced the newcomers to American culture and at the same time gave them the English vocabulary to function in American supermarkets, in doctors' and dentists' offices, schools and workplaces.

The Japanese will establish Nisco's first overseas branch in nearby Topeka, Ind.

The English professor used some of the experience she has gained working with teachers from the People's Republic of China. Since 1980, eight or nine teachers of English from Sichuan Province have studied at Goshen College under an exchange agreement. Wyse has had primary responsibility for teaching them English and American culture.

Wyse also teaches the college's courses in TESOL and supervises field experiences for TESOL students. Goshen College has the only TESOL program in Indiana in which students can become certified to teach TESOL in Indiana public school systems.

To live in another culture successfully, people must realize how much their own culture influences their view of the world, Wyse said. Everyone has these culturally determined assumptions about the "rightness and wrongness of things," she said. "Even in little things, like the size of the church bulletin, we have a whole rationale. We get identity from this."

Such frames of reference can hinder teachers when they teach people from other cultures because they assume their students are thinking as they do and interpreting cultural clues as they do. "When you teach a language, there are also certain linguistic assumptions to consider," Wyse said.

"For example, on the grammatical level in English, there is a very fixed structure as to the position of adjectives. Number comes before size, size before color, color before kind. Not all languages have fixed sequence," she added. Teachers who don't understand the different assumptions of students from other cultures "can't anticipate any of the problems that come up."

Wyse has been a member of the Goshen College faculty since 1978. The state of Indiana created TESOL as an area for teacher certification in July, 1985, and the Goshen College program was approved for certification in November, 1986. The school could submit its program for approval so quickly because it was already in place, John J. Smith, Goshen College director of teacher education, said.

TESOL courses are taught in the summer at Goshen College. Students also must have 120 hours of field experience in TESOL. This summer TESOL students observed and taught at the Nationalities Service Center, Philadelphia, Pa., and with the South Bend (Ind.) Community School Corporation.

TESOL students take courses in methods, linguistics and English language problems. Edith Consolandich, a Fulbright Scholar from Montevideo, Uruguay, helped Wyse teach the methods class in June. H. Allan Gleason, Jr., a noted linguisted expert from Canada, taught the linguistics course.

Although the demand for TESOL teachers is not great in Hoosier public schools, there is a shortage of trained TESOL teachers in the Southwest and in large cities across the country, Smith said. Graduates of the program work both in the United States and abroad.

Schmucker cited for service

Goshen College's student finance director has received the Distinguished Service Award from the Indiana Student Financial Aid Association (ISFAA).

Walter Schmucker, who has directed student finances at Goshen for more than 20 years, was chosen on the basis of outstanding leadership and service in the field of student financial aid. Schmucker is a former president of ISFAA.

The organization's current president, Ken Nieman of Anderson College, said the group considered Schmucker "a true professional in the world of financial aid."

The financial aid association works for professional development and support. Its members also follow financial aid legislation closely, informing others of trends and changes.

Faculty appointed

Five persons have joined the GC faculty, in addition to those announced earlier. Joann Johnson Burnett joins the nursing department as assistant professor of foods and nutrition; Karen Kurtz has become assistant director of information services; Julia Leatherman will be assistant professor of nursing; John Glick will become director of computing services and Mark Oklak has been appointed assistant professor of computer science.

Burnett received her B.S. from Missouri University in dietetics in 1974 and went on to complete graduate studies in the same field, graduating with a M.S. in 1979. She is a native of Kansas City, Mo.

Kurtz is a 1968 graduate of Hesston College and a 1970 graduate of GC. She also holds a M.A. from Indiana University at South Bend. Her responsibilities include writing and editing for the Student Development Division and the admissions office. Prior to coming to GC she did freelance writing. Kurtz is a native of Manson, Iowa.

A 1956 graduate of GC, Julia R. Leatherman has worked extensively in the nursing profession. She received a certificate in public administration from Indiana University in 1985 and her master's degree in community-health nursing in 1987 from Marion (Ind.) College. She is a native of Sterling, Ohio.

John Glick, a 1980 GC graduate, received his M.B.A. from Indiana University in 1986. He was a programmer-analyst at GC from 1978 to 1981 and the Mennonite Board of Missions from 1981 to 1982. From 1983 to 1987 he was data-processing coordinator for the chemistry department at Indiana University. He is a native of Harrisonburg, Va.

A data processing professional, Mark Oklak holds a B.A. in psychology from Cedarville College in Chicago, an M.B.A. in accountancy from DePaul University and a master's in the humanities from Western Kentucky University. He is a native of the South Bend-Mishawaka area.

Campus minister ordained

Nancy Lapp, director of campus ministries at Goshen College, was ordained as a minister Sunday, July 19, at College Mennonite Church.

Willis Breckbill, conference minister for Indiana-Michigan Mennonite Conference, ordained Lapp. She received special affirmations of her gifts for ministry from Victor Stoltzfus, president of Goshen College; Elizabeth Bauman, an elder of the Assembly Mennonite Church, where Lapp attends; Thelma Groff, a close friend and spiritual mentor; and her husband James, with whom she has served as campus minister at GC.

During the ordination ceremony Lapp spoke about her call to the ministry. "It has taken a long time to believe that my gifts are acceptable to God and the church. My ordination is another step in the process of believing God's blessing is upon me. I feel called to be a catalyst for healing and wholeness."

June Alliman Yoder, instructor in communication at Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries (AMBS) in Elkhart, addressed the significance of ordination. "This day commemorates and calls forth much joy," she said. "Ministry is not at a person's whim. It means to encounter God and to be sent by God. We are witnessing God's call and love."

Lapp is a recent graduate of AMBS. In addition she holds a bachelor's degree in music from Eastern Mennonite College, a degree in music therapy from Willamette University, Salem, Ore., and is a registered music therapist.

For the past six years she has served as campus minister.

Letters

Congratulations on the May '87 issue of the GC Bulletin. It's about time somebody told it like it is! Now let's see what GC does about it — if anything!

Mrs. Russell Hepler
LaGrange, Ind.

I have frequently had occasion to cite the Bulletin, when talking to friends, as a good example of what a college periodical should be. And my commendation therefore comes for the recent issue dealing with the minority problem. But I did look for something in those comments which I found missing; so I write with my observations.

I appreciated the candor with which you dealt with the experiences of minority students at Goshen. You are to be commended for the openness of your columns, even for negative evaluations.

But the question that was left in my mind was, How is Goshen dealing with these problems any differently from the secular college? There were a few references to the need of the church to demonstrate leadership in dealing with these issues. But that concept did not come through as the prime point of reference and motivation. I failed to sense an awareness — on the part of students or leaders — that our unity depends upon our oneness in Christ.

Such an assertion may sound both trite and simplistic, but I see it as essential as an underlying commitment to the lordship of Christ, to the church being the church, and to any one of us being Christian.

But again, I commend you and assure you of my support in the ministry of higher education for Christian service.

Between the memory and the vision

By Alice Roth

This year was not one in which Americans took higher education for granted.

Ernest Boyer's report of the Carnegie-Foundation study of undergraduate education (College) was released in November. This spring Allan Bloom's Closing of the American Mind shot to the top of the best-seller lists. Its provocative subtitle is "How Higher Education Has Failed Democracy and Impoverished the Souls of Today's Students."

Boyer surveyed thousands of faculty members, administrators, students and parents and pointed directions for the future. Bloom analyzed American higher education and explained how we got here.

Vision and memory. Which do we need most in higher education? Joan Chittester, prioress of the Benedictine Sisters of Erie, Pa., writes: "The problem is that in our time no one is quite sure what is really needed to make the difference: Should it be memory? Or should it be vision? Does making a difference in this day demand a return to the faith of a clearer past or does it demand decisive movement to a distinctly different future?"

Chittester's answer is no surprise: ". . . memory and vision are of a piece. Each without the other is an orphan."

Is the memory defined by Bloom, and the vision offered by Boyer of a piece? "No," I said to myself; their approaches are too different.

Then I imagined myself in conversation with them.

Roth: As educators we are much concerned with "outcomes" these days. What can we say to prospective students who want to know our goals for their years with us?

Boyer: Is it too much to expect that, even in this hard-edged, competitive age, a college graduate will live with integrity, civility — even compassion? Is it appropriate to hope that the lessons learned in a liberal education will reveal themselves in the humaneness of the graduate's relationship with others?

Bloom: True liberal education requires that the student's whole life be radically changed by it, that what he learns may affect his action, his tastes, his choices . . . . Liberal education puts everything at risk and requires students who are able to risk everything.

Roth: A big order! But each of us as faculty might spell that out differently, and parents have still other ideas of our mission.

Boyer: Scrambling for students and driven by marketplace demands, many undergraduate colleges have lost their sense of mission. They are confused about . . . how to impart shared values on which the vitality of both higher education and society depends. The disciplines have fragmented themselves into smaller and smaller pieces, and undergraduates find it difficult to see patterns in their courses and to relate what they learn to life.

Bloom: The university now offers no distinctive visage to the young person. . . . In short there is no vision, nor is there a set of competing visions, of what an educated human being is.

Roth: Do you have any hopeful word for me?

Bloom: The differences and the indifferences are too great. It is difficult to imagine that there is either the wherewithal or the energy within the university to constitute or reconstitute the idea of an educated human being. . . . However, the questions are all there. They need only to be addressed continuously and seriously.

Boyer: What we urgently need today is a constructive debate about the meaning of the undergraduate college. . . . The American college is, we believe, ready for renewal, and there is an urgency to the task.

The conversation ended there. I heaved a long sigh as I walked away: the critique of American higher education by Boyer and Bloom is discouraging.

And yet when we at Goshen College reflect on their words, we do not share their pessimism. Though the task of defining what an educated human being should be is a difficult one, we believe that issue (and others Boyer and Bloom raise) can be addressed from the resources of our institutional memory and vision.

- We have the memory of a college founded at great cost, when the vision for Mennonite (and Christian) higher education was far from unified.
- We are located in a state and a county that is currently giving high priority to education.
- We have a faculty already committed to expending the energy required for refocusing our vision.
- We have a mission, a plan and goals that provide the touchstone for our work.
- And we have alumni who remind us that the effort we make is worthwhile.

In our recent alumni survey, a 1979 graduate said: "After seven years of experience as a graduate student and instructor at two prestigious universities, I am more convinced than ever of the value of a strong liberal arts education of the kind that an inquisitive student can obtain at Goshen College. . . I recall a level of classroom teaching that was remarkably high."

Maintaining that level of excellence is our continuing challenge as we blend vision and memory at Goshen College.

The alumni survey

U.S. News cites GC

About this issue

During the spring and summer of 1986 the Goshen College Alumni Office conducted a survey of GC's 16,853 alumni. The main reason for the survey was to update records — addresses, phone numbers, marriages, children and advanced education. But, in addition, we learned many valuable things about how alumni view their college years.

More than 50 percent — 8,792 — returned the survey. Over 1,200 alumni took the opportunity to reflect on their college experience at the end of the survey form.

What do GC alumni say about their alma mater? How do they rate their experience here? Would they send their own children as students?

Many said that faculty members were critical to their learning experience. They used words like "dedicated," "committed," "inspiring," "top flight" and "model" to describe the GC faculty they had known.

Others pointed to the excellent preparation the liberal arts gave them for careers and graduate school. Many credited GC's Christian emphasis and SST for shaping their values and view of the world.

Perhaps most gratifying were the number who said GC combined a first-rate academic program and a Christian emphasis.

Coincidently, GC received recognition for those qualities in "America's Best Colleges," the cover story of the Oct. 26 issue of U.S. News & World Report. The issue cited GC for its innovative international education program and as one of three colleges in the country where "ethical values (are) lived as well as taught." (A fuller report on the issue appears on page 12.)

The positive experience of GC alumni is reflected in the fact that alumni send their children to Goshen. In the current student body 36.5 percent are children of alumni. There are third and fourth generation students here as well.

In many cases it took years for alumni to become aware of how special their GC experience was. Joseph Hoover '55 said he didn't realize "the status of my education" until one day when he was making rounds at Wesley Memorial Hospital, Chicago (now Northwestern Memorial Hospital). Dr. Paul Buey, who was (and is) an internationally known neurosurgeon, asked him where he was from and where he went to school. Hoover answered, Goshen College. "Oh yes. I know Goshen College." Dr. Buey said. "All the students we have ever had from Goshen have done extremely well." This declaration was made "without qualification," Hoover said.

In reporting on the results of the alumni survey, this issue of the Bulletin does not attempt a balanced assessment of Goshen's educational program. Instead we are reporting the sentiment of a majority of GC's alumni who look back on their experience at GC with gratitude and pride.

Faculty, friends, faith —

Alumni rate GC high

By Lois Bare

The founders of Goshen College believed that education is a moral activity, that knowledge without values is empty and that Christians have an obligation to use their education for the good of church and society.

The college motto, "Culture for Service," remains a central theme of campus life and — as the 1986 alumni survey suggests — for life after college as well.

Consider these facts about GC's alumni:

• 3,159 or 36 percent have had service experience with church related agencies. Of those with some service experience, 1,271 or 14.3 percent have been with those agencies more than three years.

• When asked for comments about their years at GC on the recent alumni survey, many said that their motivation for service came from their experience at GC.

The comments of Patricia Ebersole Zwier '76 are typical of many. "My being overseas in missions is a direct result of my service assignment while on SST. The liberal arts education I received at Goshen has served me well because a smattering of this and that is exactly what a missions assignment calls one to be and do." She and her family are with the Christian Reformed World Relief Committee in the Dominican Republic.

Besides the emphasis on service, several other trends appear in the survey statements.

First, many alumni were grateful for the options the liberal arts gave them.

"G.C. gave me the tools to live a meaningful and successful life in a complex world," said Earl Schwartzentruber '57. "Although my English major is not directly related to my present work, the general liberal arts courses laid a good foundation on which to build relational skills, a service career and international concerns."

James Snyder '51, a biblical studies major said, "My present career did not exist in 1951, and I will not be bound in 1987 by a career choice of 1951, nor will I be locked into a career escalator designed by the professionals at the top of the ladder. Goshen College did not prepare me for work; it prepared me for life, opened up new ideas, challenges, by taking me outside my narrow self interests of my childhood."

"Goshen College helped me to see the many options I had in life. I understood there were many ways to deal with life. I was not given the one perfect answer, rather tools to work out my problems and to see many sides to the same questions. My professors and college friends helped in the dialogue between the spiritual and realistic aspirations. Book knowledge became alive when I observed my professors' daily experiences."

"The most important aspect of Goshen College is the way it challenges our American culture. Goshen College offers an education that does not glorify the pursuit of wealth, status or coercive power. Rather, service to humanity and God's Kingdom replaces the self-centered 'pursuit of happiness.' At the same time, Goshen College promotes full and honest intellectual inquiry. The result is a broad-minded, prophetic college that our society desperately needs."

The combination of liberal arts and a Christian emphasis was a repeated theme in the survey comments. Vivian Mishler Schinski '65, a biology major said, "Probably the most important things Goshen gave me, next to an excellent education, are the values and Christian ethics that are so important to living a life with the Lord at the center. Goshen was a good place to prepare for life."

Many graduates cite GC professors for making an indelible impression on their lives. Catharine Eggbeer-Linde '77 summed up the feeling of many when she said, "The open and yet deeply Christian striving of my professors at Goshen College has inspired and encouraged me over the years and has perhaps a greater impact on my life than anything I gained in the academic realm. If only for this small part of the whole experience of Goshen College, I will remain deeply grateful. It is a side of education that is impossible to buy and often overlooked in our time."

Faculty members served as role models for many alumni. Though she came to GC for only her senior year, Lillian Bartel Elias '67 was impressed with the faculty's dedication. "There was no doubt in my mind that persons teaching and working at Goshen College took their commitment to Christ seriously. This was a great inspiration to me at the time and continues to be a model for my life," she said.

Others noted the fine preparation for graduate school and their careers. "I have had a variety of very interesting and challenging jobs since graduating from GC," said Rebecca Oyer Meyers '75. "In each position my liberal arts degree and interdisciplinary major provided me with an excellent background for the position. In addition, I discovered that my liberal arts degree, rather than being 'impractical,' enhanced my employability for those positions in which I was most interested. [It] continues to be the most practical (and rewarding!) degree I could have earned."

"My education at Goshen College stressed thinking, reasoning and observing instead of memorizing," said Dennis Stuckey Kauffman '68, a physics major. "Now I can adapt to new situations and learn new fields. I need not worry about becoming obsolete."

The friendships established at GC were important to many alumni. "I got an excellent education," said Twila Hostetler Nafziger '50, "but more important were friendships [I] made that have endured through the years. GC really did make a difference in my life."

Other alumni compared their experience at GC with other colleges they had attended. Joan Miller '82, a natural science major said, "Having attended five different colleges and universities throughout the past seven years, I am most satisfied with Goshen's faculty. Their generosity in sharing in students' lives, helping us to define and clarify both our personal and professional goals is a unique experience. Having pursued a second bachelor's [degree], I am now convinced that the best thing I received at Goshen was personal attention from the faculty. Individual professors have made a lasting impact on my life."

"Goshen College provided me with opportunities to think and express myself clearly, it enhanced my value system and strengthened my faith. It provided me with Christian role-models and a solid liberal arts education. While I made limited public school use of my training as an educator, I have often found myself using that training effectively in my church and in government service. 'Education for Service' certainly describes what I gained in my experiences at Goshen College."
— Patricia Cosby Holcomb '62
Elementary Education

Numerous alumni commented on how GC shaped their spiritual lives. "I had serious doubts about religion all through adolescence," said Ruth Fireoved '69. "It wasn't until I entered Goshen that I learned you can think and still be a Christian. It is because of Goshen [College] that I stayed a Mennonite."

Students who participated in SST (and since 1968, more than 4,000 have) describe the experience as life-changing.

Jan Kraus Schwartzentruber '74, a nursing major said, "My SST experience in Haiti was the turning point in my life. Even though I continued my nursing studies and career for several years after that, my Haitian experience is the base from which I began chaplaincy." Following graduation, she worked as a nurse then entered seminary. She received her M.Div. degree from the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries in June 1983 and is involved in chaplaincy work in Ontario.

"I went to Goshen College for a challenging academic course of study and was not disappointed. I think what I gained most there was a nurturing and concern for myself, a foundation on which I have been able to build and grow ever since. It is a world away from non-church schools where one is a statistic and the professor has no interest whatsoever in whether you fail or not. Goshen College's atmosphere of caring and closeness has played a definite role in helping me to shape a positive self-concept."
— Cynthia Marcus '77
Music

"SST has proved invaluable in my work," said David Warnke '80. In a cross-cultural situation, I was one of the very few who adapted and 'made it.' I owe it to GC indeed."

While most alumni express warm, positive memories of their Goshen days, some said their experience was painful. GC's Mennonite ethnicity was troubling to some. "I feel GC had little interest in non-MC's," said a '65 grad, "(even those) who were of the Mennonite family . . . particularly north of the border. I was amazed how little the MC's from the East in the U.S.A. knew about Mennonite history apart from their own groupings."

A '71 history major also had mixed feelings about his experience at GC. He supported the U.S. involvement in Vietnam and "my viewpoints were not received well by the college!" he said.

But the majority of Goshen alumni have great appreciation for the academic preparation, faculty caring, friendships and character building they received. Richard Stuckey '66 summed it up for many. "Goshen College has given me a solid background upon which to build, leading to specialization in advanced degrees. Perhaps more importantly, Goshen College has had an enormous impact on my personal life, my values and . . . view of life. Some of my best friends at college 20 years ago continue to be my best friends even though we are miles apart."

The founders of Goshen College would be pleased with the results: men and women whose lives make a difference, whose caring and life work reflects their Christian commitment.

Report career satisfaction

Alumni do it all

By Laurie Neumann Nafziger

"And what do you want to be when you grow up?"

Finding an adult answer to that familiar childhood question is a major reason for attending college. That is, of course, true for Goshen College alumni as well as current students.

While the answer to what one wants to "be" is bigger than a job or career, that is certainly part of it. Results from the recent alumni survey shed some light on what GC alumni are currently doing.

First, the survey showed that alumni are active and involved. Over 51 percent of alumni are currently employed full-time; 11 percent are employed part-time; another 11 percent are caring for family and home; almost nine percent are self-employed and over eight percent are continuing their education. Only .6 percent defined themselves as unemployed.

"Goshen gave me access to a breadth of education that I can't imagine doing without. I'm especially grateful to those professors who made learning exciting and a joy. The frequent closeness of faculty and student body that I experienced at GC is rare at the undergraduate level in academia, and I carry memories of those personal encounters with me like prized photographs."
— Philip Johnson Ruth '83

More specifically, the survey reveals that GC alumni do it all as far as careers are concerned. In the GC family we find occupations as varied as aerospace engineers, foresters, optometrists, medical illustrators and court reporters.

Although there was a wide variety of careers represented, we also see some common themes. Not surprisingly, a high percentage of GC alumni are involved in the service professions. The most common occupations cited were physicians, nurses, teachers, ministers, social workers, homemakers and businesspersons. This finding is in keeping with the GC motto of "Culture for Service" and the Mennonite philosophy of service.

These results tell us what GC alumni are doing now, but it's also interesting to know what, if any, impact a GC education had on their career decisions. Did the time and energy spent at GC make a difference?

The answer to that question is a resounding yes!

A high percentage of those responding — 41 percent — indicated that their current occupation is highly related to their major. Further, almost 40 percent reported that GC prepared them "very well" for their work, with another 45 percent feeling "adequately" prepared. Given the common occurrence of second and third careers, these results speak well for Goshen's progam.

There was some frustration expressed over the vocational counseling and job placement at Goshen. An '82 graduate voiced these concerns: "I was always affirmed that it was 'OK' to be diverse in interests and course selection — that it would 'pay off' eventually. I regret now not being a little more concentrated in at least one area. I could have used a little more help in directing myself."

However, there was also a strong theme of appreciation for the high quality of education — sometimes to their surprise. Stephen Strycker '84, a biology graduate, said: "I am in an extremely competitive academic field — not exactly to my enjoyment — because I'm not that typical 'gunner-get ahead' type that seems to dominate in medical school. Lots of folks tried to tell me that I'd have a really rough time in such a hard academic environment having come from a small liberal arts college. Most everyone there came from major universities. Well, as it pans out, nothing could be farther from the truth. I was extremely well prepared academically, and SST was invaluable in preparation for working in the hospitals here in the U.S.A. I was actually farther ahead than the other students because of all the medical procedures I was permitted to learn and do while I was in Costa Rica."

So, we know that most GC alumni are working and that they are well-prepared. But are they happy in their work?

We asked alumni to check those aspects of their current job that they find satisfying. Sixty-eight percent find their job challenging; 47 percent are pleased with their job location; 32 percent report their salary and benefits to be satisfying; 11 percent cite advancement potential as a plus; 45 percent indicate positive working conditions; and 23 percent see their current job as having real career potential.

In the area of job satisfaction the survey showed these mixed results. While job challenge, location and working conditions are good in many cases, the salary and benefits, advancement potential and career potential of most alumni jobs leave something to be desired.

The joys and strains of the work world — getting into it and living within it — are real for GC alumni. While every experience is unique, most alumni are enjoying positive work experiences, are appreciative of their GC education and are making an "imprint on their world."

Laurie Neumann Nafziger, director of alumni relations at GC from 1985 to 1986, organized the alumni survey that is the basis for this issue of the Bulletin*.*

For the series, Yousey interviewed an inmate, who had passed several lie detector tests, but was serving time for rape and murder in one of Ohio's maximum security prisons. She also talked with the state's leading polygraph expert, a 20-year veteran of the Cleveland police department in charge of scientific investigations. GC named one of 'most innovative' colleges

Goshen College was named as one of the five most innovative colleges in the U.S. and one of only three where "ethical values (are) lived as well as taught" in the cover story of the Oct. 26 issue of U.S. News & World Report magazine. The kudos came from the magazine's biennial survey of college presidents, which seeks to name "America's Best Colleges."

Being included was not a surprise to GC, because the college was named one of the best 10 smaller, comprehensive colleges in the Midwest in the 1985 survey. In the latest survey, GC tied for 12th place in the ranking of best liberal-arts colleges in the Midwest and West.

However, being named as the "most innovative" and as one of the exemplars of living values was a surprise. The other schools cited for living values as well as teaching them were Berea (Ky.) College and the University of Notre Dame.

The international education requirement, including the Study-Service Trimester program, was the reason the magazine cited for Goshen's outstanding showing.

"We were pleased to receive these three accolades from educators," GC president Victor Stoltzfus said. "Being named as one of three institutions where values are lived as well as taught is the highest honor, however. As a Mennonite institution, we are committed to educating students to live the Christian life, not merely to parrot a set of beliefs."

There was even a humorous facet to GC's being in the U.S. News spotlight. In the story naming GC as one of the five "most innovative" colleges, the reporter stated erroneously that the U.S. State Department "recruits heavily" at Goshen College.

That error has been corrected in the upcoming book version of the "America's Best Colleges" issue that the magazine is offering for sale. The reporter now has a better understanding of what Mennonites believe than he previously did.

For those who have a copy of the Oct. 26 U.S. News at hand, references to GC are on pages 51, 62, 69, 90 and 92.

Sports roundup

Two win streaks in fall sports

The 1987 Goshen College fall sports season began with high hopes.

Volleyball coach Sue Roth returned after a one-year sabbatical. The volleyball team began the season with seven straight wins before losing several tough matches. Currently the team has a record of 13-8. Team leaders are seniors Karen Yoder, Elkhart, Ind., and Dawn Gerber, Brutus, Mich., and sophomores Marcia Bender, Harrisonburg, Va., and Maria Lehman, Archbold, Ohio.

The men's tennis team also had a returning coach. John Ingold is coaching the team for only the second time since the 1964 season. Junior Mike Stoltzfus of Goshen took over the No. 1 singles position from Frank Hess, who is on SST in China. Stoltzfus was named to the NAIA District 21 All-District team. Sophomore Terry Slabach of Goshen returned at No. 2 singles and senior Chris Gotwals, Souderton, Pa., moved up to number three from number four in 1986.

Four 1986 starters returned to the women's tennis team coached by Joy Yoder Hess. The team finished second in the Hoosier Conference for Women tournament, where three players were finalists: sophomore Ingrid Hess, Goshen, senior Ann Conrad, Perkasie, Pa., and junior Kim Leuz, Elkhart, Ind. Goshen native Susan Hunsberger, a junior, was named to the all-conference team at number-one singles and at number-one doubles with her partner, Hess.

Nine seniors returned to the soccer team that also includes 13 freshmen. After starting the season with an 0-2-1 record, coach Dwain Hartzler's squad won nine of their next 11 matches, including eight straight, to improve the record to 12-3-2. Senior Dan Liechty of Goshen leads the Leafs with 11 goals. Other high scorers are seniors Dan Wenger, Lancaster, Pa., Doug Sharp, Monument, Colo., Kenton Longenecker, New Holland, Pa., and Darin Derstine, Elkhart, Ind. Freshman goalie Todd Neuenschwander of Kidron, Ohio has three shutouts among the nine wins.

Both the men's and women's cross-country teams, under first-year coach Jeff Birky, were small in number. Sophomore David Little of Elkhart is the number-one runner for the men. The number-one runner for the women is junior Aletha Stahl, Harrisonburg, Va., who holds the GC women's cross-country record.

The field hockey team won 8-1, before tough competition dropped the record to 10-7. Seventh-year coach Linda Shetler's team consisted mainly of seniors and freshmen.

Seniors Chris Landis, Lancaster, Pa., Vanessa King, Gordonville, Pa., Regina Miller, Mason, Mich., and Becky Yoder, Goshen, Ind., returned as starters and led the team, along with sophomores Michelle Miller, Akron, N.Y., and Kathy Nussbaum, Akron, Pa. Freshman Krissy Martin of Leola, Pa., gained much experience as the team's goalie.

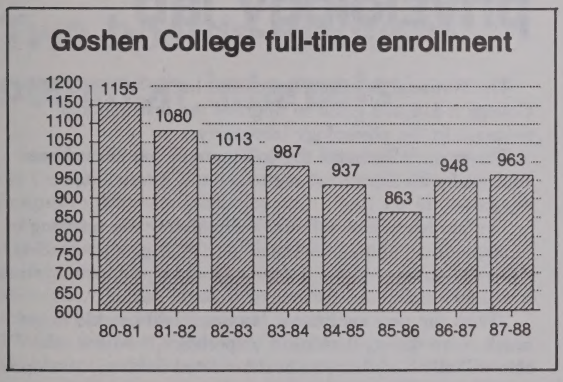
Two join Board of Overseers

Two new members have been appointed to the Goshen College Board of Overseers by the Mennonite Board of Education.

Sara Gingerich Wengerd, Salisbury, Pa., graduated from GC in 1964 with a B.S. in nursing. She is a member of the Springs Mennonite Church (Allegheny Conference) where she is the peace representative and assistant librarian. She is also a board member of the Laurelville Mennonite Church Center and on the planning committee of the Presbyterian-Mennonite Shalom Conferences held at Laurelville. In addition to freelance writing, she works as a volunteer nurse and has organized volunteers to give home nursing care to the elderly poor. She and her husband, John, are the parents of two daughters.

Paul J. Helmuth, Louisville, Ohio, attended GC in 1952-53 before finishing his degree at Case Western Reserve University. He is a member of the Beech Mennonite Church, Louisville, where he is the auditor and member of the Educational Loan Fund Committee. He has also served as church treasurer, MYF sponsor and on the Sunday school committee. Helmuth is employed as a CPA with the accounting firm of Hall, Kistler & Co. He and his wife, Lavera, are the parents of two daughters and two sons.

The Board of Overseers has responsibility for general oversight of Goshen College. It meets four times a year to review college policies, set tuition, adopt a budget and appoint college personnel.



Enrollment rises again

Enrollment at Goshen College is up for the second year in a row, reported registrar John Nyce. The student body increased to 963 full-time students, up from 948 a year ago. The total full-time equivalent is 1,014 students.

The freshmen class numbered 242 students, down 10 from last year's freshmen class.

Students from the Mennonite Church make up 68 percent of the student body, and another six percent are from related Mennonite groups — figures that are about the same as those for the past 20 years, Nyce said. Mennonite students from Indiana-Michigan Conference make up the largest group with 204 students. Ohio Conference, the second largest group, increased from 123 to 132 students. Franconia Conference sent 14 freshmen this year, up from five last year, and students from Iowa-Nebraska Conference increased from 34 to 40.

New board members elected

Four new members of the Goshen College Alumni Board were confirmed at the annual business meeting, Oct. 3. They were elected for three-year terms.

Lucille Yoder Gotwals '52, of Souderton, Pa., manages a family business with her husband, Robert '51. They are the parents of three children, two of whom are GC graduates; one son is currently a student. Lucy will serve two years as president-elect, then two years as president.

Orin Beechy '37, presently serves as class agent for the class of 1937. He is a real estate agent. He and his wife, Marie Ramseyer Beechy '40, live in Wooster, Ohio. Their three daughters are all Goshen College graduates.

Myrl Nofziger '64, is co-owner of a real estate business in Goshen, Ind. He and Ardith Helmuth Nofziger '63 have three children. Daughter Angela is a GC freshman.

Gwen Brenneman Rich '67, lives in Archbold, Ohio, with her husband, Phil '69, and their three children. Gwen is a registered nurse and works at Fairlawn Haven.

Kerry Stutzman, a senior from Denver, Colo., is the new student representative. Other board members, President Tom Bishop, Mary Jane Breneman Eby, Dwight McFadden and Susan Yoder Stempel, completed their terms at the October meeting.

The alumni board meets semi-annually to advise and channel information to and from the alumni office. The board has become increasingly active in recruiting new students and in fund-raising.

Faculty workshop examines total campus environment

As part of the total program review begun in 1986, 95 members of the Goshen College faculty spent Aug. 24-28 examining how to implement GC's statement of mission and desired outcomes in all aspects of campus life, including curriculum, student advising and counselling, extra-curricular activities, residence-hall living, religious activities and faculty development.

The GC faculty expanded the already existing mission statement in March, 1987, by adding the statement of 10 desired outcomes to articulate the school's vision in a more concrete way. The 10 outcomes include fostering the development of faith, intercultural openness, communication ability, strategic thinking, aesthetic sensitivity, personal integrity, leadership ability, ecological perspectives, a sense of vocational direction and self-understanding.

However, the program-review steering committee believed that the faculty needed to take time to step back and examine the statement in a setting different from the usual format of faculty and committee meetings.

Thus a special week was set aside for the faculty workshop, which was funded by a $35,000 grant from the Lilly Endowment, Inc., Indianapolis, Ind., and money from the GC President's Confidence fund.

GC president Victor Stoltzfus summarized the workshop's purpose in his introductory remarks. "In our 93 years, Goshen College has nourished thousands of creative leaders and followers," Stoltzfus said. "We gather this week to try to make a strong college program even better and more internally consistent, and to catch from each other an infectious enthusiasm about our college mission."

Dr. J. Herman Blake, nationally known educator, opened the workshop with a speech and discussion on "Developing an Environment for the Student as Learner." Blake is the retired president of Tougaloo (Miss.) College and former provost of Oakes College at the University of California at Santa Cruz.

The workshop was divided between plenary sessions of all participants and group work. The participants were divided into 11 groups. Each group was assigned to examine one outcome and asked to formulate a vision of how it could be implemented in campus life. The 11th group was composed of the top-level administrators, who worked on how the general campus atmosphere could be improved.

Key parts of the workshop were two worship sessions, led by Nancy Lapp and Keith Graber Miller, to seek God's guidance and help the participants discern the Lord's will for Goshen College.

The participants worked eight hours daily, eating lunch together and sharing a hog roast one evening. Each group had to prepare preliminary and final reports of its work together and recommendations.

Wenger to head nursing society

A. Frances Wenger, head of the division of nursing, was named president-elect of the National Transcultural Nursing Society Oct. 8 at the society's annual meeting in Miami, Fla. She will be president-elect for one year and serve as president for two years.

Founded in 1970 by Dr. Madeleine Leininger, the 200-member society works to improve nursing care to people whose values, beliefs and culture differ and to promote and conduct research to advance the field of transcultural nursing. Among the members are nurses, other health-care professionals, anthropologists and scholars who have an interest in transcultural nursing.

Currently the society is increasing its international membership. The 1988 annual meeting will be in Edmonton, Alberta, and the 1989 annual meeting will be at the University of Limburg, Maastrict, the Netherlands.

NSF grant to physiology lab

The National Science Foundation has awarded Goshen College a $16,108 grant to upgrade the instructional program in the physiology laboratory.

The grant will enable the college to set up six stations equipped with computers, software and interfacing equipment in the lab.

The hardware and software will enhance the teaching of concepts in anatomy and physiology through experiments that previously were taught through demonstrations, James S. Miller, associate professor of biology, said.

"With the new equipment, students will be able to get much more direct, 'hands-on' experience," Miller said. "It also will allow students in health-related fields to develop a familiarity with computers, learn how computers are interfaced to laboratory equipment and see how computers can be used for data collection and manipulation."

Among the software packages purchased will be "Experiments in Human Physiology," a package that will enable students to use a computer while doing experiments about skin temperature, respiration rate and response time; and a "cardiovascular fitness lab" that will be used to study the cardiovascular differences between exercisers and non-exercisers, the effect of exercise on the system and the effect of stimulants such as coffee.

Other software packages will enable students to measure lung volumes, take electrocardiograms, and study concepts of muscle physiology and reflexes.

Additional software will be used to simulate hemoglobin, heart and muscle functions and an electrocardiogram.

Approximately 1,550 students will benefit from the improved laboratory facilities in the next five years, Miller estimated. He hopes to have the equipment in place for courses during the winter trimester, which begins Jan. 5.

Goshen College: Continuity and Change

Goshen College alumni and friends who have not been to Goshen for a long time will be pleased to see the beauty of the campus captured in a new video production.

Introduced by former dean Carl Kreider, this 15-minute video takes a look at the unchanged values at Goshen College. Through the eyes of administrators, students, faculty and alumni, we see how Goshen has kept up with the demand for change in curricula and program, while maintaining eternal values.

Two boards discuss common interests

Members of the Goshen College Board of Overseers and the Conference Advisory Board met Oct. 15-16 on the GC campus to discuss mutual concerns.

Formed a year ago, the Conference Advisory Board (CAB) is composed of two representatives from the seven conferences with which GC works most closely — Indiana-Michigan, Illinois, Ohio, New York State Fellowship, Atlantic Coast, Allegheny and Franconia.

Willis Breckbill, conference minister for Indiana-Michigan Conference and chair of the CAB, helped the two groups define the purpose of their meeting. The CAB can help the college by giving affirmations and information, as well as by sharing concerns that its members have about the college, Breckbill said. In turn the CAB can communicate issues of the Board of Overseers and the administration to the churches.

In his report to the CAB, GC president Victor Stoltzfus noted the critical role of conference and pastoral leadership in telling the GC story. One example of conference and church advocacy that has benefited the college is the congregational student-aid plan. This year congregations gave over $470,000 to 465 students at GC. It is "very affirming to us to find that type of initiative," Stoltzfus said.

Serving as a resource person for the joint meeting was Paul Mininger, president emeritus of Goshen College. Mininger spoke on the topic "Christian Education for Decisions, Community and Action."

In its regular meeting the Board of Overseers approved a budget of $10.6 million for the 1987-88 fiscal year.

Faculty help Bethel celebrate

Two GC faculty members contributed works of art to the Bethel College centennial celebration Oct. 8-12 in North Newton, Kan.

Lauren D. Friesen, associate professor of drama, spent two years researching and writing a play about the history of Bethel College. He attended the premiere of the play, "The House of God," during the centennial celebrations. Friesen is a 1965 Bethel College graduate.

Dennis Friesen-Carper, assistant professor of music, conducted the premiere of his musical work, "ParaDoxology," which was commissioned for the centennial celebration. He is a 1979 Bethel graduate.

"ParaDoxology" was built around the musical themes from two hymns in the Mennonite Hymnal, number 606 and 241. The Mid-Kansas Symphony Orchestra and the Newton Chorale performed the piece.

Another of Friesen-Carper's musical compositions had its premiere June 23 in Duluth, Minn. The piece, "Interrogue," was commissioned for the inaugural season of the Lake Superior Chamber Orchestra. Friesen-Carper's brother-in-law, Warren Friesen, conducted the premiere.

Alumni support is vital

By Tom Bishop

The alumni of Goshen College are one of the vital keys to the success of our growing and prosperous college. Alumni fund raising is critically important to balancing the budget. The alumni are the largest, single constituent group of givers to the college, giving about eight percent of the total general fund, not to mention the numerous restricted gifts. One-third of all Goshen College alumni participate in fund raising, a level of commitment that exceeds the national average.

However, giving money is not the only way Goshen College alumni can support their Alma Mater. More important than money is the belief, confidence and advocacy that alumni show for Goshen College in their communities.

Many alumni who believe in Goshen College are already promoting the college to prospective students. Alumni area meetings, pizza parties with prospective students, visits to the campus and general college advocacy has been a significant factor in increasing the student enrollment. Goshen College alumni referred 168 student names to the Admissions Office this past year. Going beyond money or general advocacy, alumni are supporting GC by encouraging their own children to attend there.

Their belief in the value of a Goshen College education arises from experience, memory, review and new information. The alumni can rely on the College Relations and Admissions Offices for new information about GC through newsletters, videos and opportunities to visit the campus.

What do alumni-advocates say about Goshen College? They emphasize the fact that many aspects of GC's program are superior even in this complex and competitive world: the international experience, the Christian environment, the peace emphasis, the dedicated faculty and students with a value system.

Recent national recognition of GC in the the cover story of the Oct. 26, 1987, issue of U.S. News & World Report, "America's Best Colleges," confirms what many of us know already: GC has something special that appeals to a cross section of today's youth from our churches and communities.

I believe increased alumni support, coupled with a growing student population base, a greater Mennonite interest in education and national recognition of GC's excellence have contributed significantly to the rise in enrollment over the last two years.

I am proud to be an alumnus of Goshen College. I appreciate the quality education I received, and I am confident that that same potential is available to our children.

GC alumni have taken on the characteristics of their Alma Mater by their advocacy with money, students, ideas and information. This trend is what assures me that Goshen College will be prepared with the educational environment to support our Christian communities for many years to come.

Tom Bishop '69, an investment banker in Denver, Colo., completed a term as president of the Alumni Board in October. Trinda Hirschey Bishop '69 is an alumni-admissions volunteer. Fifteen students from their home church, First Mennonite, Denver, are currently GC students.

Charitable Planning After Tax Reform

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 has been called the most significant tax legislation in more than 30 years. The changes include lowering of tax rates, reducing or eliminating many deductions, clamping down on tax shelters and doing away with the tax-favored status of long term capital gain.

However, charitable giving is alive and well. It has taken on new importance and is one of the few discretionary ways left to control taxable income.

The new tax laws have made giving stock or real estate that has increased in value even more attractive.
